Under-Currents By The Duchess

vice, but difficult—difficult. And yet, if Sedley should live to run him now, to blast his memory hereafter, how would that be?—Kindly Death.

A tigerish gleam comes into the terribly youthful eyes and with a slow, strange, crawling movement, the delicate sinewy hands grasp the edge of his chair. How seldom it took those it ought to take. The old, the miserable, it left languishing in their earthly prisons, whilst the young, the happy, were those whose names were written on the roll of those appointed to die.

Surely justice was badly meted out in this life, whatever the hereafter—if there was one—might show? Yes, Death was slow about carrying off those it ought to take. He repeats this sentence to himself many times, as if there is a fascination in it, drumming always in that slow, curious fashion on the arms of his chair.

For an hour he sits thus, with his head thrust forward, lost in unholiness. A long ringing at the hall-door bell startles him into life again and for a moment the terrible drumming noise ceases. He still sits motionless as if listening, and then a quick light step in the hall outside, coming ever nearer, strikes on his ear. It is the footstep of his son. At once it decides whatever doubt had been harassing him.

With an almost youthful alacrity he springs to his feet and flings out his arms as though desirous of trying their strength; then he throws back his head; a low, exultant cry breaks from him. An infernal glow lights his withered face, and in his eyes gleam the fire of a devilish resolve.

CHAPTER LI.

And my large kingdom for a little grave.

A little, little grave, an obscure grave.

It is ten o'clock, and night like a heavy shroud lies over wood and garden. The hour has struck; the solemn tones falling slowly, warningly as it were, from the old clock in the ivied tower. Those sounds have now died away, and silence, the more intense for their having been, reigns once more.

A virgin moon trailing her glory overhead, surrounded by a million stars; a faint, salt breath comes up from the slumbering ocean, and from the night itself come forth the many soft, sweet sounds that, dead to the insensate ear, still make themselves felt.

Tom Peyton, treading with cautious steps the upper part of the garden on his way to the ruin, is filled vaguely with this knowledge of Nature's inner workings. The very dew uprising from the grass he treads speaks to him, soothing in part the troubled thoughts that throng his mind. He had with-held from Griselda all his fears, but a knowledge of his world has told him that this expulsion of her from her uncle's house, without a moment's warning, will materially injure her position in the eyes of a society very critical to judge a beauty, poor but honest.

Softly he makes his way to the old house, to get the letter he knows will await him there. Poor darling, what will be in it? Further vexations? With a desire to avoid all risks he elects to enter by the back, where a large rent in the dilapidated walls will enable him to squeeze through into the room where the letter will be.

He has, with considerable difficulty and a rather painful abrasion of his shin, reached the desired goal, and secured the bulky note lying perdu in the spot indicated, when something so strongly attracts his attention that he even delays opening the note to hear what it may be. Voice decidedly; and in the next room. A room divided from him only by a wall of abnormal thickness, and with an open space where the door had been. There must have been a pause in the conversation as he entered his part of the building or else he must have heard them even then. But one thing at once dawns upon him: the speaker at this instant is Mr. Dysart.

As he stands motionless, sorely knowing what to do, afraid for Griselda's sake to retire lest he shall draw attention to himself, the voices suddenly rise. The second voice is strange to him—coarse, vulgar and distasteful, and very threatening. Who is it that is here at this lonely hour, menacing that old man? Forgetful of all injuries, he remembers only the miserable decrepitude of Mr. Dysart, and determines to stay awhile lest harm befall him, and a rescue be needed.

The voices grow in wrath, the unknown one being loud in vituperation. The actual words do not reach Peyton, nor is he desirous of hearing them, but the knowledge that a quarrel, deep and bitter, is being carried out to its bitter end in the next room is clear to him.

And now, all suddenly, as it were the voices cease, there is a strained silence, as if each man waits with drawn sword for the other's next word, and then—a sickening sound. A dull awful blow, as of oak meeting flesh and blood, a ghastly groan, and then silence.

Great Heaven! What has happened? Has he killed that old man? Peyton springs forward, filled with a passion of regret that he should have so long delayed to get to his successor.

Greatest Rule Of Health

And How It May Be Carried Out With Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

You sometimes hear it said that the most important Rules of Health is "Daily movement of the Bowels." Constipation begins with the bowels, but it does not end there. Headaches, backaches, aching limbs, indigestion, biliousness, kidney derangements, appendicitis, and the most serious diseases imaginable often have their beginning with constipation of the bowels.

There is one treatment which has a direct and combined action on the bowels, the liver and the kidneys and gets these organs into good working order in remarkably quick time, and that is Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

They afford relief quickly, but they do more than that. They positively cure constipation, and insure lasting regularity of the bowels by setting the liver right.

Mr. M. Lach, 30 Home Street, Brookville, Ont., writes: "For many years I have been troubled with constipation and have tried a number of remedies, but without obtaining much benefit. About a year ago I started using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and have found them to be the best medicine for constipation that I have ever used. I would advise anyone troubled with this complaint to try the same remedy."

Mrs. R. Childs, Harrison, Ont., writes: "I have suffered from constipation and kidney trouble for some time. One day I bought some of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills to see if they would help me, and to my delight, I received great benefit from them in a short time. They are a splendid medicine, and I always keep them on hand as a household remedy." Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are so universally used as a treatment for constipation and liver and kidney troubles that you can obtain them at any store where medicines are on sale. One pill a dose; 25 cents a box. Edmondson, Bates & Co., Ltd., Toronto.
