

The Difference

I was sitting in a bar one night after a long day at school, trying to find what life is all about. There was a man sitting across from where I was. He was looking at me with a strange expression. It was an expression that I see time after time when I go out. I decided to eat my supper on my own to see what he would do next.

Without the use of my hands, I ate with my mouth, picking one piece at a time. Gazing at him, I knew what he was thinking about. It went something like this: "How can they let a man like him be seen in bars where people from all walks of life enter?"

I saw a look of amazement in his eyes when the young waitress came over and sat down as if I was part of the crowd. A puzzled look crept up on his face, as she nodded in agreement to mumbling. "How can she understand what he is saying?", the man wondered. "Or does she only make him believe that she understands? Does he really know the effect this could bring on him if he sees here time after time? Doesn't he know anything about falling in love? She's not crazy enough to fall in love with him, is she?"

He rose and left in disgust. I continued my supper, content with the thought of being me.
