

plans to buy a fleet of nuclear-powered submarines, the Ottawa Citizen reported on June 22. General Liston said that the Department "agonized" over the proper role of the military and public servants in discussing government policy. However, he said the new policy prohibited any kind of promotion or advocacy and restricted those personnel who gave speeches to providing factual, explanatory information. "There's always a grey line. However, it's the duty of any department to explain policy to the Canadian people." MP Lloyd Axworthy (Lib — Winnipeg-Fort Garry) was critical of the use of military personnel to talk about the White Paper in public, saying, "If the military is being used, then it's politicizing the military, which is a very serious change in the arm's-length relationship that should be established," the report said.
