

Photo by Dr. Shutt.

A ROOM BROODER.

An illustration of a room brooder house in which a coal burning stove is placed. This house is large enough to accommodate from three hundred to five hundred chicks and a simple arrangement of yards such as shown makes a most convenient place for brooding chicks until they can have free range. The stove is very easily regulated and the amount of fuel required is small.