A Singer's Experience with Brit-

Keep Every Thing Under Lock as y and Look Upon Customers with Suspicious Eyes—A Hunt for a Jacqueminot Rose.

In an interview with a New York Herald In an interview with a New York Herald reporter a singer who has undergone much of her training abroad describes her search after a desired article in a London store.

"In London they keep every thing under lock and key. Why, I went to the shoemaker of His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to buy a pair of rubbers. Here's the conversation that attended the sale:

"What would the lady like?"

"A pair of rubbers."

"Oh, yes. Mr. Brown, please step this way."

"Mr. Brown appears and inquires:
"What would you like, miss!'

"'Oh, yes, Fosdick! Fosdick, please call harles to unlock the drawer the sandals

Charles to unlock the drawer the sandals are in.'

"Charles comes forward, unlocks drawer after drawer till I find a pair to fit, and I begin to look upon rubbers as very valuable articles and wonder if I must keep mine in a jewel case hereafter.

"You go into a picture gallery, and every time you turn your head you see a guard behind you watching that you do not take any thing, and there are innumerable in junctions to 'Move on,' 'Don't touch the pictures,' 'No canes or umbrellas allowed inside,' etc.

pictures, 'No canes or umbrellas allowed inside,' oto.

"You have only to cross the channel—a short hour and a half it takes—and you are in a totally different nation, different costumes, different language, and oh! how different the customs. Every thing is open to inspection. No one suspects you of being a thief; nothing is under lock and key.

"Why, I have been to the Palace of Versailles on a fountain day when probably ten thousand were there, and all you saw of espionage was a man to let you in and one to let you out. And inside you can walk all through, look at the beautiful vases, pictures, rarest objects of art without a protest from any one. For all I could see, one could carry off two or three vases, poke his ures, rarest objects of art without a pro-test from any one. For all I could see, one could carry off two or three vases, poke his umbrella through a picture, punch a hole in the wall, frop dynamite in a corner and no one would know who did it.

"And the English tradespeople are so slow comprehending you, while the French understand the slightest nod, and even an-ticipate your wishes.

This is not as it should be. Some relic of the unknown dead should be preserved, whereby they might, if search should be afterward made for them by friends or relatives, be identified; and the graves should be numbered and catalogued, so that on such a relic being recognized, the dust of its former possessor might be discoverable.
But who cares for the "unknown!"

"Rattle his bones over the stones, He's only a pauper whom nobedy owns!"

THE FOOT WAS WOODEN.

And its Owner Used to Having it Stepped On in Street Cars.

A Michigan avenue car stopped at Becom street recently to permit a young lady and a gentleman to get on, says the Detroi News. Nows.

As the former, who was young as well as pretty, passed forward to accept a seat offered her, she tripped over the outstretched foot of an individual who was aiting at the rear of the car.

In an instant she was allocet at full length in the bottom of the car. The exclamations of the passengers and the black looks they directed at the extended stumbling block should have caused its owner to sink through the seat. Quicker almost than she went down, however, she was on her feet again, and gracefully acknowledging the courtesy of the gentleman who surrendered his seat. She was greatly embarrassed, and her escort looked like a thunder cloud and as if he would like to punch the head of the fellow who had caused all the trouble. But he didn't. He contented himself with occasionally stepping vigorously on the still extended and offending foot. There did not seem to be the least sign of consciouaness from its owner, while the passengers awaited the denouement. Finally, with a lurch from the car as an excuse, the foot received another ferocious dig that was so pronounced as to almost twist the man out of the seat. Thinking that perhaps he had really injured the man, the escort muttered an excuse that was received in great equanimity, with the gratifying explanation: "Oh, don't spologiac; it's a wooden one and used to being stepped on."

SPEED OF A BULLET. How the Government Learns the Rapidity of a Rife Ball.

How fast does a builet travel! If it is in proper shape for traveling Colonel Flagier and his officers say it ought to go at a rate of 1,275 feet a second apon leaving the rifle.

This matter of speed is very important, and if a cartridge is five or ten feet too fast or too slow the quantity of powder must be changed. This matter of speed is tested in a very interesting way.

or too slow the quantity of powder must be changed. This matter of speed is tested in a very interesting way.

At the northern end of the arsenal grounds is a long wooden shed, in which a distance of one hundred feet has already been carefully marked off, says the Philadelphia Record. At either end of this space is a stand something like a target, with a large circular opening where the bull's-eye would be.

Across each opening is stretched a small electric wire connected with a delicate instrument in another room.

The rifle from which the firing is done is so aimed that the bullet which files from it cuts both wires. Obviously the difference in time between the cutting of the first and of the second wire will mark the speed of the bullet through one hundred feet.

The measurement of this brief space of time is done by an instrument of French invention called the Boulinge chromograph. When the first wire is cut an electric circuit is broken and a rod which is suspended from a magnet falls a short distance, touching in its descent a point which makes a mark on its side.

The hreaking of the second wire lets drop its descent a point which makes a distribution of the second wire lets drop a second smaller rod in the same way. By means of the difference in the marks on the rods it is possible to estimate the difference in the time of their failing, and from this this speed of the builet per second. There is a provision for detecting any error, and nearly absolute accuracy is second.

Hitlis found that a bullet has traveled too fast or too slow that means that there is too much or too little powder in the plarge, that the compression is wrong, or that the atmospheric conditions are unfa-that the atmospheric conditions are discretified by the charge of powder varies from sixty-five to sixty-nine grains, and is varied by as little as a tenth of a grain to secure just the right speed. The compression may also have to be changed.

These tests of speed are made throughout the day, eight cartridges being fired at a time, and if any error is detected the necessary change is made at once.

If it is found that the speed is all right, then the accuracy of the builds in hitting an object must be determined. For this purpose they are fired over a five hundred yard range at a twelve-foct square target, purpose they are need over a new industrial yard range at a twelve-foot square target, near the river bank.

By an ingenious device by which the aid of photography is called in the exact point of each builet is rapidly noted, and the general average of accuracy is afterward ascertained.

A Laugh-Producing Plant.

Palgrave, in his work on Central and Eastern Arabia, mentions a plant whose seed produces effects analogous to those of laughing gas. The plant is a native of Arabia. A dwarf variety is found in Kasum, and another variety at Oman, which at lains a height of from three to four fost, with woody stems wide apreadure tranches. and another variety at Oman, which attains a height of from three to four fost, with woody stems, wide-spreading branches and green foliage. The flowers are produced in clusters and are yellow in color. The seed pods contain two or three black seeds of the size and shape of a French bean. Their flavor is a little like that of oplum, the taste is sweet and the odor from them produces a sickening sensation and is slightly offensive. These seeds, when pulverized and taken in small doses, operate upon a person in a very peculiar manner. He begins to laugh loudly and boisterously and then sings, dances and cuts up all kinds of fantastic capers. The effect continues shout an hour, and the patient is extremely comical. When the excitement ceases the exhausted individual fails into a dead sleep which continues for an hour or more, and when he awakens he is utterly unconscious that any such demonstrations have been made by him.
