FURTHER GAINS FOR BRITISH.

LONDON, Sept. 29. An attack by the British troops on the Somme front early to-day resulted in the capture of a strongly defended farm 500 yards southwest of Le Sars, the War Office announces. The official statement follows: The night was quiet on the greater part of our front. The positions we have won north of Thiepval were heavily shelled. Our bombing parties were active in the neighborhood of the Schwaben redoubt and the Hessian trench, parts of which are still held by the enemy. A strongly defended farm 500 yards south of Le Sars were captured by our troops early this morning. North of Ytres, two miles south of Bettecourt and southeast of Bapaume, our aeroplanes observed a huge explosion as if a large ammunition dump had blown up. The smoke ascended 9,000 feet.

brought down in two minutes and 30 seconds by stop watch, is the latest record of Second Lieut. George Gujnermer. Accidentally, Lieut. Gujnermer fell 10,000 feet but escaped unhurt. Gujnermer went to the assistance of a comrade who was hard pressed by five German machines. He brought down two of them within 30 seconds, and then, rising, overtook the third which he shot down two minutes later. He was looking for the remaining German machines when a shell burst beneath him and stripped the left wing of his aeroplane of every stitch of its covering, and he plunged giddily earth-wards.

THE CHANCELLOR'S SPEECH.

LONDON, Sept. 29. The evening newspapers publish lengthy reports of Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg's speech, contrasting it with his early utterances, and drawing the conclusion that Germany fears defeat, and is anxious for peace. The Standard says that the Chancellor makes it clear that peace must be on the whole a German peace, but there is now no talk of vast indemnities, great territorial acquisitions, and so forth. The Chancellor labors to make the world believe that the conflict was forced on his country by England. How came it then that England, France and Russia were indifferently prepared, while Germany was ready to the last button. If the slaughter of the youth of France and Russia really affects Germany to tears, it is curious that she never thought of ending the carnage when she was in a position of undoubted advantage. The Standard concludes with the remark that neutrals must now be told, with the utmost politeness of course, that terms of peace are no concern of theirs. The Westminster Gazette says there is nothing for it but continuance of the war, and Germany definitely and mercilessly defeated. The address of the German Imperial Chancellor in the Reichstag is more remarkable for that which it omitted than what it said, according to Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of War Trade, who in discussing the speech with the Associated Press to-day, declared the most significant fact in connection with the Chancellor's utterance was the failure to mention Belgium. Lord Robert says that there is a very great change in the tone of the speech over previous efforts. The Chancellor's talk of a complete German victory is entirely absent. There was not a word about Belgium. The significance of this was that probably he was unable to say anything about Belgium. As his listeners can be assumed to be the whole world, he was bound to offend a section of it if Belgium was mentioned. If he attempted to justify the German occupation he would offend first of all neutral opinion, and equally he would offend his own people if he expressed determination to give up that country. Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg's denunciation of England, while violent, contained nothing really new. It was merely an old trick of attempting to convince our Allies that we are trading on their efforts and bleeding them to death in the process. But recent events on the Somme ought to convince him of his error. The idea that we want supremacy is fantastic. Discussing this phase of the Chancellor's speech, Lord Robert declared, you will note that in this race for commercial supremacy England is the chief opponent to be feared, the United States being left out altogether. Lord Robert continued, any one can really see that we made no preparation for any such contest for world supremacy. I note in a portion of his speech devoted to efforts for peace my name is used, but I cannot understand his complaint, that Germany was once ready for peace on his own terms. The Germans were ready not for peace but for a truce to enable them to prepare to enforce their own terms on the world. There will be no peace as long as Germany is content to be ruled by the military caste. Lord Robert stated he believed that the German Imperial Chancellor was sincere in his declaration that Germany was waging war with every possible instrument.

"We Want More Men."

Yet despite the entry of the fourteenth nation—and our truth Ally—in to the fray, what is the pressing need and demand to-day in this country? Hidden away in a modest paragraph or two in the papers on Wednesday is the perfectly clear answer to this. At the banquet of the departing Commonwealth deputation, Sir William Robertson—whose authority in this matter is unrivalled—said: "We want more men. We want all the men we can get. We want them not merely to win this war—we feel quite certain of that—but we want to win the peace. We want to win a peace as will compensate us for the great sacrifices we have made. Assume the triumph of the Allies and end of the war next year. We then have incomparably the greatest masses of national problems and friendly claims to disentangle and settle which have ever faced statesmanship after a campaign; and Great Britain can only hope to play the part the nations will expect and call on her to play provided she can give the world ocular demonstration, on land as well as on sea, of the fact that she is not a spent, but a mighty force. Therefore we must continue to pile up the men and to pile up the munitions against the day of settlement. Sir William Robertson's call is as true as it is nobly phrased.—Saturday Review.

NAVAL DISTURBERS.—About 4.20 p.m. yesterday two naval men, under the influence of the cup that cheers, started to mix matters near Mr. P. J. Shea's store, Water Street, and notwithstanding the fatherly advice of an officer of the law they persisted in keeping up the fight. Seeing that this timely council was of no avail he was forced to call for assistance and soon after had the disturbers landed in the cooler at the lockup.

A little cold may not seem a dangerous thing—you may feel inclined to let it go on hoping that to-morrow it will be better—but can you afford to take chances?
