Nomination Day.

The ratepayers will bear in mind that the nomination for Mayor, Reeve, and Deputies takes place in the Town Hall on Monday, at 10 o'clock, and in the different Wards for Council lors at 12 o'clock,

The Huntington Banquet.

We have been prevented by want of space from giving a connected report of the speeches delivered at the Montreal Isanquet last Tuesday. As they are of considerable interest, we purpose touching briefly upon the salient points in the several speeches.

Lucius Seth Huntington has done a service to his country which will be better appreciated when viewed by our sons in the cold clear light of history than it now is. Yet even now the people of Canadahold Mr Huntington in grateful honor, and it is not too much to say that the magnificient demonstration at Montreal last Tuesday was a national "vote of thanks."—an expression of the feeling of the great majority of the people of Canada. Mr Huntington undertook a peculiarly distasteful task, and carried it out to the end with unfaltering courage, unwearied energy, and admirable tact and temper. He describes in vivid language the feelings with which he contemplated the herculean task before him when the evidence of Ministerial guilt first came into his hands. He says:

Am I chargeable with unmanly weakness if I tell you frankly that I counted the cost of the course it seemed my duty, my destiny, to pursue—that I recognised the great power of an unscruptions Ministry, who were soon to become my maddened and relentless enemies? Was I too weak, if at times the fulfilment of my duty seemed impossible, when I remembered the influence of the great corporations and the vast money power of the great capitalists whose monstrous game I now saw behind the scenes? Was I too timid, if I dreaded the onslaught of an infuriated party, set on by their incriminated masters to stab my reputation, to filch my good name, and to hang me under accumulated slanders? (Repeated cheers.) What might I expect from that vast army of contractors, blood-suckers, and parisites whose Goldwin Smith so fitly denominated the criminal population, if they found me attempting to dismantle their camps and stop their supplies? And let me tell you, Su; that I dreaded, perhaps more than all, the shock I must inflict on that large class of my countrymen of all parties whose good opinion I prize so much, and who would not believe them susceptible of proof, and in whose eyes I might be for months a calumniator, while I waited the tardy events which would establish

And he adds:

And he adds:

"I must not compromise my friends of the Opposition, who knew nothing of my proofs until later in the day, when I was permitted to take two or three of them into my confidence, and from whom I have received the most unvarying kindness and support; but at the time I speak of I had to take the whole fearful responshift ** alone."

Mr Huntangton pays a warm tribute to the Conservatives whose love of truth and duty was stronger than their party affinities, and says:

"We are all proul to-day to join hands with the Smiths, the Burpees, the Cartwrights, and their associates, the cernof the great party we have opposed, attracted to us by their irresustible convictions and their patriotic devotion to honest government," honest government,"

An interesting historical parallel was drawn by Mr Huntington, between the political corruption rampant in England in the good old times, and the Canadian political corruption of these later days. He spoke with severiy of an expression in Sir John A Macdonald's recent speech which implied that Lord Dufferin would be ready to enact the part played by Sir Edmund Head, and help corruptionists to power if another "double shuffle" were attempted another "double shalle were at-tempted

The speeches throughout the even-ing were singularly free from the ex-ultation of a mere party triumph.

Their prevailing tonewas one of deep thankfulness that success had crownthankfulness that success had crowned the long campaign against an ever accumulating corruption which was fast deadening the moral sense of the nation, and an earnest determination to inaugurate a different state of things is future. The three principal speakers all expressed the hope that the new Government would not survive the less of the people's confidence or of their own

Mr Mackenzie made reference in his speech to the runours about a general election, in these words:

general election, in these words:

"The Chairman, in his remarks, gave expression to the hore that a general election is not far of I believe, Sir, that if such an election took place, it would result in such an exhibit of power on the part of the present Ministry, and such a woor of the confidence reposed in them by the people, as would astenish the broken remnants of the corrupt party in power. I can only say, with reference to that, that the Administration will doubtless consult the interest of the country as to the time that it should take place."

This does not look as if the elect

This doe not look as if the elections were mean at hand as some apprehen to Tory papers fear. Mr. Mackenza aid a high tribute to Mr. Anglin, and marking—"He has acted faithfully and generously by the party lately in Opposition, and he will, doubtless, yet occupy a high position in the counsels of this country (prolonged cheers), in which he will have the opportunity of doing service to himself and reliable services to the State." It is Mr. Mackenzie's opinion that, apart from the Pacific Scandal altogether, the late Ministry had run its course, and would not have been able to carry on the reliable. would not have been able to carry on through this Parliament.

Blake, in course of his speech Mr. Blake, in course of his speech, said that it was a great mistake to lay down that a Cabinet should be formed by five members from the largest Province, four from the next, and two each from the others; it would be absolutely impossible to carry on the affairs of this country constitutionally on this principle. Men should be chosen from all parts of the country, so that they should not run on
