AFTER HUNDRED HOURS' FIGHT

work actively in the way of rescue, and the rescuers, while anxious to asde. only triffing aid. It was felt it was time to adopt a more speedy me-thod of release, but the difficulty was to find one which would result in an early rescue without increasing the chances of disaster to both Sanford and those laboring in his behalf. Several of those in charge of the work were strongly in favor of the method already in practice, believing that while painfully slow, it was nevertheless the only safe way. There was a cessation of work for a short time, and it looked as though a disagreement between the advocates of opposing methods was to mar the record of splendid ef-fort which had characterized the work of rescue. The necessity for prompter action, however, overcame the scruples of those who opposed a new me-thod, and at 11 a m. the new plan was put in operation.

Risking Life to Save Life. The momentous and dangerous task of putting in operation the new means of rescue was delegated to two men, whose ample fitness was shown by the successful and rapid manner in which they fulfilled it. John Carnie, jun., who had on the previous day spent 19 hours in the shaft, was again found willing to risk life and limb in the work of rescue. Robert Hamilton, one of the two or three men in the neigh-borhood who was personally acquainted with Sanford, showed by his willingness to descend the shaft, that he, too, possessed the nobility of soul, divine in its essence, that prompted him to lay down his life for his friend. The men received able assistance Richard Doyle, Henry Allen and others, but upon them rested the respon-sibility of effecting Sanford's release, and to them is due a large share of the

Making a New Tunne

The situation which they faced was this. Sanford rested in a small space formed by the lodging of loose bricks together in such a manner as to hold up the tons of debris piled above him. Into this tiny cell, which had proved at once a living tomb and a place of salvation, an entry had been made from the new shaft, at a distance of about 46½ feet from the surface of the ground. This opening was con-nected with the shaft by a small tunnel eighteen inches square, and a couple of feet in length. Sanford had been so far released that his head and shoulders could rest in this opening, with the face in a downward position, but his legs were buried in bricks and sand below the level of the small tunnel. It was about 11 a.m. when Carnie and Hamilton proceeded to carry into execution the plan decided upon. They dug vertically in the new shaft, until they had reached a distance of several feet below the level of the small tunnel. They then dug in toward the brick wall of the well, at the same time taking precautions against the caving-in earth surrounding the small tunnel. the pressure on Sanford's limbs de-ereased, and finally ceased. About 3 p.m. a rope had been fastened about farm until after Sanford was released. Sanford's shoulders and carried up the shaft, where it was held taut by a dozen willing hands. This lessened the danger to the imprisoned man by any sudden giving way of the debris, either above or below him. When a sufficient space had been cleared to release his legs, the rope was gradually lowered, and Sanford's body was allowed to slip down to the bottom of #### rescue was an accomplished fact.

Back to Earth's Surface. It was 5:30 p.m. when the anxious group at the mouth of the shaft heard to the joyous news shouted from below, and just three minutes later Sanford himself reached the surface of the earth. In the meantime the crowd had been asked to keep perfect silence when Sanford was brought up, as any noise might have a serious effect up-on him. Sanford was brought up in the big bucket by Robert Hamilton, the chair-shaped box which was constructed several days ago not being found necessary. Sanford was laid on the wooden stretcher which had been softly padded to receive his bat-tered body. A bandage was hastily

"The pitcher that goes often to the well is broken at last." There's a world of wisdom in that familiar proverb, and a sound application of it to disease, especially to such familiar forms of disease as coughs and colds. Singularly enough the very thing that ought to cause alarm is given as excuse for a feelicine "just as good" for weak lungs.

The use of Dr. Pierce's Golden

"I was very sick indeed," writes Mrs. Mollie Jacobs, of Felton, Kent Co., Delaware, "and our family doctor said I had consumption. I thought I must die soon for I felt so bad. Had a bad cough, spit blood, was very short of breath, in fact could hardly get my breath at all some times. I had pains in my chest and right lung, also had dyspepsia. Before I took your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Pleasant Pellets' I was so weak I could not sweep a room, and now I can do a small washing. I worked in the canning factory this fall, and I feel like a new person. I believe that the Lord and your medicine have saved my life. I was sick over two years. I took thirteen bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and four vials of Dr. Pierce's Pellets."

placed over his eyes to exclude the sunlight, which would have blinded him after his 100 hours' experience of total darkness and dim lantern light. Careful hands carried their burden to the nearby farm house, between a silent lane of bareheaded men and pitying women. The patient was taken into a bedroom in front of the house, on the lower floor, where soft-voiced kindly nurses were waiting with warm blankets and restoratives. Here Sanford was left with the nurses and the medical attendants, all others being excluded. His father and sisters were allowed to see him for a few minutes only. Dr. Dunton, of Paris, stayed with his patient all the evening, and expressed himself as well satisfied with the prospects for recovery.

How the News Spread.

At the moment when Sanford's release was effected, there were over 2,000 people gathered around the well. While they forbore from making any demonstration of their joy, in deference to the wishes of the medical men, their countenances were an eloquent testimony to the pleasure which filled every heart. Several messengers, mounted on bicycles or behind fast horses, started to do the 21/2 miles to Paris in record time, with the result that in 12 minutes from the time of rescue the news was being bulletined in the London Advertiser office and in other newspaper offices all over Can-ada, where it was awaited with a suspense only a little less acute than that felt by those actually on the scene. In Paris itself the news was hailed with a joy that equaled in its intensity the anxiety and interest which had felt for days as to Sanford's fate. In the Penman mills and the Paris wincey mills, which had closed at 1 p.m. steam was hastily gotten up, and in a few minutes the great mill whistles boomed out, carrying for miles across the rolling hills of Brant county and down the lovely valley of the Grand River the news that Joshua Sanford had emerged from his living tomb.

Sister Warned In a Dream.

While the work of rescue was proceeding in the afternoon, Sanford told his rescuers that a few days before accident he had received a letter from his sister. In this she begged him not to go down any more wells, as she had had a dream in which she had seen him killed by the caving in of a well. The partial fulfillment of her mysterious dream will probably te cited as conclusive evidence by people who believe that there is more in dreams than midnight indigestion, as Talmage called them.

Honor to Whom Honor Is Due.

In addition to Carnie, Hamilton, and the others who took part in the actual labor of rescue, two other men are entitled to a large share of the praise due on account of the successful termination of the work.

One of them was Richard Thomson, assistant manager of the Penman on Saturday night, when the initial work in connection with this big annual event was done. The splendid success that the travelers had last year will undoubtedly be surpassed,

> Dorchester Man Gave Valuable Aid. work of rescue, he having had the benefit of considerable experience in found himself in the neighborhood of the accident by reason of a business engagement, he being an agent for the Gale Manufacturing Company, of the new excavation, whence it was drawn through to the shaft, and the Albion, Mich. On visiting the well, he found that it was the intention of the rescuing party to dig down through the debris of the old well, in an endeavor to reach Sanford. Mr. Cartwright pointed out the fatal consequences which this would almost certainly have, as it would mean the destroying of Sanford's nook of refuge, and his en-gulfment in a shower of bricks and earth. On Mr. Cartwright's suggestion the sinking of the shaft was then pro-ceeded with. Meanwhile he went on to make some experiments along a line to which he had devoted considerable attention, that of estimating distances from the application of principles of acoustics, the science of sound. By a study of the vibrations which convey sounds to the ear, he can judge what distance they have traveled. In experimenting in the well, he found that while the 5-inch iron casing which ran down the center of the well made an excellent conductor of sound, the vibrations were not strong enough reach from Sanford's place of imprisonment to the top of the well, owing to the resistance of the air to the sound

Close Estimate of Sanford's Depth. By descending the old well until he reached the first of the debris which filled it, 27 feet below the surface, Mr. Cartwright found that he could there easily carry on a conversation with Sanford. He learned that the imprisoned man was in great pain, and that he had no idea of his depth, Sanford repeatedly begged that his rescuers would "Hurry up." Mr. Cartwright, by ascending the casing a short distance, and using a small sounder, found the point at which the vibrations were the clearest. From this he made his estimate of the depth at which Sanford was lying, which he fixed at 45 feet or a trifle more. It was the intention of the workers in the shaft to sink it to the depth of the old well, 86 feet, but Mr. Cartwright told them to stop when they were about 47 feet down. This they did, and on tunneling in they found Sanford at depth of 46¼ feet. Then followed the vexatious efforts to release Sanford's legs and feet. Sanford had been found in a different position to that expected by his rescuers, and the tunnel constructed, instead of entering the well squarely, entered it at an opposite angle to that at which Sanford was lying. The edge of the brick wall and the tunnel made an acute angle, around which his body had to be drawn, and this made the work of rescue still more difficult. On realizing the conditions, Mr.Cartwright advised the adoption of the plan which afterwards proved of such signal success, but his advice was not taken for some time. Mr. Thomson and Mr. Carnie, however, recognized its advantages, and with their support the plan was adopted. After the rescue Mr. Cartwright was warmly thanked by Mr. John Penman, Mr. Thomson, Dr. Addison and others for the valuable
