"It is very pleasant to find that I have your sympathy rather than your censure," he returned appreciatively. "Every day, as I went to and from my work, I studied the faces of those whom I met on the streets, hoping that by some chance I might meet one or both of you again; but I never saw anyone who looked like you. Of course, on leaving the hospital, I was entirely without means, as the authorities had appropriated what money, was found on my person to provide for my necessities; but the first ten dollars that I carned after getting well I put sacredly by to restore to you If I should ever have the opportunity. I had about despaired of ever being able to do so, and indeed I was even brooding over my misfortune but just now as we mets so opportunely. I trust, young ladies, he concluded, lifting his hat as if to pass on, "that I have set myself right in your estimation, and that I shall no longer be regarded as a miserable sneak-thief, who imposed upon you while appearing to do you a favor."

"You have tortured yourself beyond all reason, Mr. Keith," Alice said, looking up with a frank, pleasant smile. "I confess that I am yery glad to have the mystery shall be myself to he mystery as that I have yet glad to have the mystery shall be mystery as the first place in the apparent evidence against him.

He glanced wistfully at Bess as he since dollars. I do not believe a small bit of paper like that ever weighed so much before."

He glanced wistfully at Bess as he spoke, and Alice, catching his look, returned heartily:

"Do not let that trouble vou," the young man returned. "It is all past now; no one was to blame for the accident but the careless person who left his orange peel on the sidewalk for me to step upon. I would gladly undergo twice as much rather than never to have been able to better myself right in your opinion."

Me bowed again, and was about to move on, when Alice detained him again. "Pray, wait one moment. Mr. Keith."

CHAPTER IV.

"I am so glad to know that he is honest! I did not believe, with that face and those eyes, that he would do so mean a thing as to run off with that money. I think he is the handsomest fellow I have ever seen." Queen Bess remarked, in a low, concentrated tone, as the two girls strolled on, after bidding Kenneth Keith good-morning. "You are enthusiastic, Elizabeth," Alice returned, somewhat fronfeally.

"Pray, wait one moment, Mr. Keith,"
She said. "This money does not all belong to me. Remember, you gave the flower dealer a dollar for me, and you must allow me to pay my debts."

She drew forth her purse as she spoke. took a dollar and her card from it, and handed both to him.

"You are enthusiastic, Elizabeth," Alice returned, somewhat fronically. Whenever she was irritated by Queen Bess, or the young girl did anything of which she disapproved, she always showed her full name.

"Well, but aren't you glad, Alice? and handed both to him."

handed both to him.

He took them with a flush upon his manly face, and glanced at the name on the card which she had given him. He knew that she trusted him, and believed his story, or she never would have introduced herself thus to him.

"You are very kind, Miss Sherman,"

"Well, but aren't you glad, Alice? and don't you think that he is fine-looking?"

It think that he has the noblest face in the world, and—I am more glad than I can tell you that he did not willfully keep my money," Alice responded, with unusual fervor, while a crimson flush Suffused her face.

Queen Bess regarded her wonderingly.

It was very seldom that Alice expressed so much. She was a remarkably self-contained young lady, and it was not often that she betrayed the deeper sentiments of her nature, even to Queen Bess, who had always been almost her other self.

"I wonder how he happens to be here."

"I wonder how he happens to be here,"
Bess remarked, thoughtfully. "I wonder if—we shall meet him again?"
"You appear to be strangely interested in the young man," Alice remarked, now shooting a searching glance at her companion.

"I am," Queen Bess frankly returned;
"and so are you, I you would but confess it. He has been a very mysterious subject, and we have thought and talked subject, and we have thought and talked subject. so much about him that it is natural we proposed that they should go back to the hotel, and, turning, they retraced their steps in awkward and almost un-broken silence.

All day long Alice Sherman dreamed of that tall, symmetrical figure, of that frank, genial, handsome face, with its grave yet sweet brown eyes, in which there seemed to lurk a touch of wistful radness which had come directly to here sadness, which had gone directly to her heart; of that broad, white forehead, gleaming out between masses of rich, curling chestnut hair; of a straight perfect nose, and a mouth whose expression was one of mingled strength and gentle-

It was a face that had haunted her ever since that first meeting on Broad-way, when Kenneth Keith had come to aid, and demanded her money from flower vendor, but afterward, when had believed him to be dishonest, a aid, and demanded her money feeling of contempt had taken possession of her, and yet this had been mingled with keen pain that one who had seemed to be so true and noble should be so unworthy, and she had tried to forget him. But today, upon learning how unjust her suspicions had been a violent reaction had taken place, and a feeling of deep sympathy and admiration, If not something of even a stronger nature, had crowded all other thoughts from her heart.

heart. She had realized, too, that Queen Bess had been similarly impressed, and for the first time in her life, a feeting of bitter jealousy and resentment against her became rooted in her mind and impelled her to avoid her companionship.

Bess instinctively felt that something was wrong with her lifelong friend, and so, after dinner, when Alice ran upstairs and shut herself within her own room, she donned her hat and strolled off again toward the beach, and gave herself up to musing on the meeting of the morning. She found a cozy nook among the rocks, and spreading her shawl down to protect her dress, she seated herself upon it, took off her hat, and leaning back beneath the cool shelter of the crags above her, she gazed dreamily out upon the water and counted the white-winged vessels in the distance as the shiftmered across her vision, while all the time her mind and heart were full of the handsome face that she had seen in the morning, and of a name which to her were full. and of a name which, to her, was fast becoming the most euphonious in the

THE SCHEME TO EMBRACE EIGHT CANADIAN CITIES

BASEBALL.

PROPOSED NEW LEAGUE. Toronto, Nov. 4. - At a meeting of the directors of the Toronto Baseball Club, held last night, to wind up the affairs of the 1902 season, Retiring President Ed Mack propounded a scheme for a Canadian professional league, to be composed of two circuits, embracing four cities east of Toronto, and four cities west of this place including London, all the players to be Canadian, who have resided in Canada for a year at least previous to the opening of the season.

Mr. Mack stated that it was the intention to apply for admission to the National Association of Minor Leagues, so as to get protection for the players, and to have games every day in the week to keep the players out of mis-chief. Mr. Mack proposed that the Toronto Club waive the right to the territory, and allow the new league to put a team in here when the Eastern Leaguers were away from home. This proposal was opposed by Directors Applegath, Soole and Alexander, who will likely be most concerned in the management of the Toronto Club for the next year. They said it would have a tendency to kill the game in Toronto. They were unanimous in their decision not to allow any club but the Eastern League in their territory, and that settled that part of the proposition for good and all. Outside of this phrase of the question Mr. Mack's confreres gave the scheme an unqualified approval. They thought it would be a splendid thing for the development of the baseball talent that is lying loose around this out of the question entirely, and an

From present indications Toronto will be represented in the Eastern League next year by an even stronger team than the one that carried off the 1962 championship. The probable team is as follows:

First base, Bill Massey. Second base, Jimmy Miller. Short stop, Jimmy Downey or Lewis Third base, Bill Shindle (captain.)

Pitchers, Louis Bruce, "Button" Briggs, "Jimmy" Gardner, Alex Pear-Maurice Wolfe. Of these Massey, Miller, Gibson, Bruce, Pearson, Briggs and Ryan have

THE LONDON-TORONTO GAME.

Toronto Telegram: Toronto's victory over London was the result of the quickness of the Rosedale men in dropping on the ball. He was about the smallest wing man on exhibition, and his mark did things to him-but he got the ball. London thinks they were up against it both in luck and the referee last Saturday, and that if it can all be done over again they can trim Toronto. They claim that they should have had a try when they were only awarded a rouge, and that Stollery's drop goal was nothing more nor less than a punt. But then the tale of the loser is always a hard luck story,

The Torontos came out of Saturday's game with London in pretty fair shape. and they are confident of beating the Argonaut seconds in the final game of the series despite the fact that the intermediate scullers will be strengthened for the occasion.

HOCKEY.

TORONTO TEAMS. Toronto, Nov. 4.—There will be at least two strong senior hockey teams in Toronto this winter. The Wellingtons are likely to remain much the same as ever, thugh some changes will take place on their team. Goalkeeper "Dutchy" Bilton died during the year. and McKay and Ardagh are understood to have decided to retire. McKay will play with the Bank of Toronto team. For the position of goal, Mark Tooze, H. Ardagh and Cadet Loudon, of R. C., are said to be the competitors. Hamber will be the new man on the line in all probability, so that the team will likely be constructed as follows: Goal, Tooze, Ardagh or Loudon; point, Smart; cover point, Darlforwards. Chadwick. Hill McLaren and Hamber.

The St. George's are looking for new blood. Claude Temple has gone away to Brandon, Man.; and W. Pardo, of 'Varsity, an old St. George's boy, will take his place in the posts. Buzzer Gordon, late of Stratford, is booked for point, and Hughie Lambe, for cover. The forwards will be selected from Hynes, Birmingham, Gillies, Webster. Pardo and Bert Morrison, who, it is said, will return to the club that taught him how to play the game. THE PARIS CLUB.

Paris, Ont., Nov. 5 .- The Paris Hockey Club has reorganized under auspicious circumstances. The election of officers resulted as follows: Pa- far. trons, Mayor Brown, A. P. Baird and P. Adams; honorary president, T. Nelson: first vice-president. Robert intruding upon anyone's solitude."
