THE KING OF REMEDIES. From Ross C. C. Handsputer, Esq., of Tinerton, N.S.—

"I have been afflicted with fearful running sores on my legs for 25 years. Have employed at different times, six of the best doctors I could get. But all of their skill and treatment did me no good, and I was left sometimes unable to walk. Last year my legs became so bad after an attack of la grippe that I never expected to walk again. In this condition I concluded to try Dock Blood Purifier, and before the first bottle was half gone I felt a great change. I continued on to use the medicine, and applied to the sores Norton's Healing Balm. Before I had finished the third bottle my sores were all healed up and my health better than for years, and would highly recommend Dr. Norton's Dock Blood Purifier to all afflicted with sores of any kind.

And I with head as white as snow— I knelt down there
And made this prayer:

pass Out of the waving, blue-eyed grass, With buttercups sprinkled upon it. Jennie was watching young Farmer Payne Picking a buttercup out of the lane; Stephen was strong and merry. "Jennie!" she heard her mother call, But there at her side stood the farmer tall, And her cheeks grew as red as a cherry. "I'm coming, mother!" she turned to go, And there went Daisy and Bess and Flo

And who could do a single thing With a yellow buttercup under their chin, But nestle the great strong arms within And grow as red as the clover.

"Maybe 'tis Ben," then she blushed again, "And maybe 'tis only Stephen Payne"—
Then the dark crept over the meadow lane And buttercups a sprinkle And buttercups a-sprinkle Not a single sound in the dusky dell

Save the tinkle of Daisy's silver bell, "Tink a link a tinkle!" For mother's voice and the bars forgot The cows are into the meadow lot Knee deep in the dewy clover. Jennie and Steve came slowly up, Her soft chin yellow with buttercup, His handsome face flushed over.

"Where are you. Jennie, 'tis late and cold." 'We're comin', mother," said Stephen bold 'The cows got into the meadow, We stopped to drive them slowly up," Then he slyly hid the buttercup And kissed her again in the shadow.

A Curse That Came Home. Farmer Leslie sat smoking in his doorway in the most contented frame of mind possible to a man, for he was at that moment basking in the warm sunshine of prosperity. It gave him a great content, but it was purely an animal content-no chord of his higher nature was touched. As far as the eye could see, the hills and the flocks on the hills were his. The excellent woman attending to his corporeal comfort, within the dwelling, was his. The bright girl sewing at an upper window, and the handsome boy galloping along the valley on his new pony, were his children. The great barn filled with harvested grain was his. He did not look up and claim the sky, but all else about him was of value as a part of his domain. "Me and mine," was the refrain of his song. At that moment something came around the corner of the house that did not belong to him, and it gave him a shock-a very disagreeable thrill, that was mostly disgust and no quality of fear in it. The something was a tramp. The name is synonymous with obliquy, and this specimen did not belie the name. He shivered in the sunlight as if he had the ague. His rags stood out like splinters of distress, telling of a long friction with time. His limbs had that flaccid, relaxed bond. His eyes were bloodshot. The only tramped the thoroughfares of the world.

Up in the east end of the Agricultural building, under charge of the Superintendent Allen Pringle, there is an exhibit which makes the heart of the small boy sigh for cold weather and buckwheat cakes. This is the Ontario honey exhibit, and here again excellence seems to have been the rule in selecting the exhibit. An experienced grower of honey himself, Mr. Pringle takes more than ordinary interest in the product of these industrious little workers. The various grades are all set apart and labelled.
