"THERE is one story which every woman has told so often that she believes it herself."
 "What is that?"
 "The story about the rich man whom she could have married."

FROM South Africa comes this story of a classic bon mot on the part of a British gunner, apparently marked for doom. It happened during General White's luckless sortie from Ladysmith, when the British battery mules on the left flank were stampeded.

The captain of one of the batteries, seeing his first sergeant flying by with the first gun, shouted angrily:

"Hi, sir! where are you going?"

To which the gunner curtly replied:

"Hanged if I know! Ask the mules."
