against the Dardanelles—as to the wisdom of which Lord Fisher holds such a strong opinion—for Mr. Balfour was not a colleague of Mr. Churchill, but simply a friendly helper and adviser, for whom problems of naval strategy have always a strong attraction. None the less, the connection of Mr. Balfour with Mr. Churchill at the admiralty was far too intimate to make it easy for Lord Fisher to serve under or with Mr. Balfour.

GERMAN COMMENT.

ROTTERDAM, May 21.—While Deutsche Tages Zeitung calls upon the German press not to inform England of its real views on the English cabinet crisis, and some journals see in it merely a domestic question, and cannot adversely affect the British conduct of the war, Count Reventlow remarks that it would be a great mistake if the crisis caused the reappearance of the longings in certain quarters

ITALIAN TROOPS HELD IN LEASH

Men Are Eager to Cross Border and Engage Enemy.

straining the soldiers from crossing the frontier here, the men being anxious to reconquer Friuli from which came Berengar, the first king of Italy.

Alpine Soldiers Eager. The troops most anxious to fight are the Alpine soldiers who are of the same type as the French Alpine chasseur. These men number 60,000 and they have been chosen from among the strongest and the bravest of the mountaineers. They are commanded by a selected set of officers who know all the secrets of the snow-capped boundaries. The Alpine troops occupy all the passes, their motto being "No admittance thru here."

Four of the best known Italian generals commanding the army corps are here working the whole of each day and part of the night with the assistance of their staffs. These men are: General Frugones, who distinguished himself in Libya; L. Zucchi, who is much admired by the troops; Nava, well known for his energy and Brusati, a brother of Gen. Ugo Brusati, aide de camp to the king. Among the others in command are Generals Besozzi and Bertotti, who have seen service in Tripoli; Belsotti, who is most anxious for a forward movement, and Sbaccanella, famous for his special movable fortifications.

Strongly Fortified. The general opinion is that it would be almost impossible for decisive action thru the well-fortified Alpine regions of the Province of Trent, where an attack would have as its only object the keeping there of a large contingent of hostile troops. For the same reason, a landing of Italian troops might occur on the Dalmatian coast, it is said, or some contingent might go to help Montenegro and Serbia resume their offensive.

If Italy and Austria go to war, the conflict may find its solution in the valley of the Isonzo River, in eastern Friuli, according to military critics. The Italians, it is said, may advance with three main bodies from San Giorgio, Fulmanova and Cornaux, proceeding towards Gorizia, Gradisca and Monfalcone, having as their ultimate object Trieste.

Alpine troops with mounted artillery have been entrusted to check any Austrian flank attack from Mount Coglio, in the Carnio. It is said that the Austrians have threatened to flood eastern Friuli with the Isonzo River, many canals having been constructed in that section for irrigation, but experts do not consider that this would be practicable.

HEROIC DOCTORS TENDED WOUNDED

Capt. Scrimger, Montreal, Shielded Man With Own Body at Headquarters.

INJURED MURDERED

Ammunition Supply and Medical Attendance Continued Unbroken Thru Fight.

(By Sir Max Aitken, Canadian Official Eye-witness.)

LONDON, May 21.—In his official narrative of some incidents that occurred in the battle of Langemarck, Sir Max Aitken, Canadian official eye-witness, recounts the following:

And here is a story of a brigade headquarters that lived in a house surrounded by a moat, over which there was only one road. On Thursday the enemy's artillery found the house, and later on, as they came, their rifle fire found it also. The staff went on with its work until the end of the week, when incendiary shells set the place alight, and they were forced to move. The road being impassable on account of the shrapnel, they swam the moat, but one of them was badly wounded, for whom swimming was out of the question. Captain Scrimger, medical officer attached to the Royal Montreal Regiment, protected the wounded man with his own body against the shrapnel that was coming thru the naked rafters, and carried him out of the blazing house into the open. Two of the staff, Lieut. Col. Hughes (brigade major of the Third Infantry Brigade) and Lieut. Thompson (Third Brigade Grenade Company officer) then re-swam the moat, and, waiting for a lull in the shell fire, the wounded man across the road onto a stretcher and into a dressing station, after which they went on with their own duties.

In one of the many isolated bits of night work, it happened that a German detachment was cut off by one of ours, and its situation was hopeless. There was something like a gasp as the enemy realised this, and then a silence, broken by a voice crying in unmistakable German-American accents:

"Have a heart!"

Found Wounded Killed.

The Canadians had just recovered a dressing station which had been abandoned a few hours before and there they had found the bodies of their comrades with their wounds dressed, dead of fresh wounds by the bayonet. It is unfortunate that the Canadians first serious experience of the enemy should have included asphyxiation by gas and the murder of wounded and unconscious men. The supply of ammunition and medical attendance continued unbroken and unceasing thru all the phases of the last engagement. The ammunition columns waited for hour after hour at their stated points ready to distribute supplies as needed. Their business was to stay where they could be found and if the shrapnel caught them lined up by the roadside that was part of the business, too. They stuck out their lives long days and nights, coming up full and going away empty, with no more fuss than is made by delivery wagons on Drummond street in Montreal.

MEDICAL OFFICERS DID DUTY

The medical officers had the distraction of incessant work, and it was curious to see how they took their professional man-ner into the field. Half the cities and towns in the Dominion might have identified their own doctors under the official uniforms as far as they could see them. It would be inadequate to call these men heroic. The whole soul of those engaged ground, will take away in his mind pictures that time can never wipe out.
