

members, chosen to consider particular bills on other matters and to report their opinion about them to the House. Each committee has its own chairman, and it does its work in the same way as the committee of the whole house. If a bill does not pass the committee which has been chosen to study and discuss it, there is little probability that it will pass the House, at least during the existing session of parliament. In such a case you will probably read in the newspapers that it has been "killed in committee."

9. Supremacy of the House of Commons.

The House of Commons holds the purse of the nation, and this is the true reason why the government must have its support or resign. Unless the House is willing, no tax can be collected by the Dominion government, and no money paid out for any purpose beyond a few matters expressly mentioned in the constitution. It is evident that the work of government could not long go on, if there were no money to pay those employed in the public service, such as the clerks in the parliament buildings
