SHARP ATTACK ON

against the Anglo-Saxon idea of sound government, and such is of the nature

Well, gentlemen, if the proverbial Philadelphia lawyer could unravel the minds of the members of the royal commission, as exhibited in the draft bill, we might attain some degree of certainty as to the meaning of clause 51, relating to the limitation of expenses. As it is, I fancy that we have, as yet, no occasion for losing sleep about this matter. While there is undoubtedly an intention to limit agency expenses, the agent who holds an ordinarily fair contract today can safely

"The matter of estimate formed the subject of the next resolution. The delegates debated this very thoroughly, with the result that it was resolved: 'That in the opinion of this association, conservative estimates of the probable profits results should be furnished by the companies to the

"I find that clause 88 of the bill reads as follows: 'No such life insurance Toronto, Aug. 19.—Rev. John Scott, company, and no officer, director or one of the best known of the older agent thereof, shall issue or circulate Methodist divines in Canada, died at or cause or permit to be issued or cirhis home here last night. A It would not appear contrary to this clause to issue statements of the actual results of policy No. 9999 for $2,000, on the 20 payment life plan, in order that the agent might innocently show his inquiring client what his economy had just done for Mr. Jones, who happened to have just such a policy as he was recommending. The commission were practically told that if official estimates were banned, the condition of unofficial estimates would surely be both inevitable and worse.

Deferred Dividends.

"Deferred dividends were the subject of a resolution affirming the right of an intending insurer to buy whatever kind of policy he desired, whether with or without dividend, with deferred or annual dividends. "The commission replies to this by

General Agents' Work.

An interesting address was delivered by C. Jerome Edwards, president New York Life Underwriters' Association on the "General Agent and His Work." The Armstrong committee had apparently regarded the general agent as an excrescence who was a parasite upon the man in the field, and the assured alike. This was unjust. The agent in the field could not keep up the required enthusiasm unless could have stimulus and sympathetic encouragement from his general manager or general agent. "You should have been more persistent and my husband would not have died without insurance and left his family unprovided for." W. J. Bell, of Guelph, created a mild sensation by contrasting the banks and the insurance companies. He felt that the banking act stood in need of amendment far more than did the right in and take insurance act. Twelve banks, or 25 per cent, had failed since 1880, some of them as the result of criminality. No insurance company had failed in the meantime, and no insurance manager had gone to the penitentiary. The banks could invest where they pleased, and they were not inspected but the insurance companies compelled by the Government to invest in certain securities, and the insurance department saw to it that the assets were always on hand to protect
