PTY THE POOR DIPLOMAT One Must Have Independent Means To Enter This Life (Times Special Correspondence.) London, July 20—Those critics who have complained of the difficulties of diplomats abroad and who are agitating for a living wage for ambassadors and others would do well to read the recent disclosure by Sir Arthur Nicolson, permanent under secretary of state for foreign affairs in the British government. According to Sir Arthur, who is really the directing genius of England's foreign affairs, candidates for positions in the English diplomatic service are first asked to guarantee that they have an independent income of at least $2,000 a year. This is not done with the idea of limiting the positions to young men of the moneyed class but simply to be sure that the man can live in a foreign capital. "For the first two years when he goes abroad," Sir Arthur says, "he gets no salary at all, and even for his early years as third and second secretary, his salary is very modest and, especially as an attaché, he has to go to some of the bigger capitals, and living there is very expensive, and if one were not sure that he had a certain minimum to live upon, we should have a series of bankrupts dotted over Europe. In St. Petersburg, for instance, my last post, I was frequently asked by parents what was the minimum on which an attaché could live. I could lodge one or two at the embassy, but if not lodged there, I always told them $3,000 a year was the minimum to live on in St. Petersburg. "It is not so much a cheaper mode of living," he said, "it is really the excessive prices which, as in New York, men have to pay for the bare necessities of life. The vice-consul's salary is really the salary of a skilled artisan in New York."

Gilbert's Grocery "No," said the old gentleman, sternly, "I will not do it. Never have I sold anything by false representations, and I will not begin now." For a moment he was silent, and the clerk who stood before him could see that the better nature of his employer was fighting strongly for the right. "No," said the old man again, "I will not do it. It is an inferior grade of shoe and I will never pass it off as anything better. Mark it 'A Shoe Fit for a Queen' and put it in the window. A queen does not have to do much walking."
