Original Correspondence.

[TO THE EDITOR OF THE STAR.]

SIR.—I beg through the medium of your valuable Paper, to lay before your readers, and this community generally, the following essay on Truth, which I trust will have a tendency to cause those who make a profession of Religion to become lovers of truth, and shun the very appearance of sordid lying and falsehood.

1st.—As to the nature of truth, we may observe, that it either is the agreement of our expressions to the nature of things, or to our knowledge, or apprehensions of them.

Our expressions may agree with our conceptions of things, but not with their nature; in which case we call the falsehood a mistake or error. This is indeed a soft term, and implies but little blame; yet even this is culpable, when the means of knowledge are afforded us: for that law that requires us to do our duty, requires a care to inform ourselves about the nature of the duty. On the other hand, if our expressions do not agree with our conceptions, it is lying, though they may happen to agree with the nature of the thing. For here is a design to misrepresent it; and as our words are understood to express more immediately our own conceptions, here is in fact an intended false representation.

This, however, is not the case when we only rehearse a line in a historical manner, and make it not our own.

And I must observe here, that persons may act as well as speak a lie; for words are
