

THIS SNAKE LOVED MUSIC.
Dwelt in the church and became a Fair Performer on the Organ.

A party of musicians the other day were discussing the question of the love of music in various members of the animal creation and particularly among snakes. The majority of them denied that snakes in particular had any idea of music and scorned the thing as absurd and impossible, when one of them offered to relate a story from his own experience that would be convincing on the point at issue. As he was reputed to be a good story teller his companions agreed to hear the evidence, however much they might doubt the correctness of his theories.

"Some years ago," said he "I was the organist in a little country church near the Blue Mountains in Schenckill county. The mountains were full of snakes. I used often to go out in the woods and take my organ along, just to have a little music and practice by myself. One day I was sitting on a log by a spring, playing softly and hardly thinking what I was doing, when I suddenly saw a giant blacksnake very close to me coiled up and swaying his head to the rhythm of the tune. I am not afraid of snakes and knew this one to be as harmless as a kitten, so I was more amazed than frightened, and continued to play a variety of airs set him to see the effect. He appeared to enjoy it immensely, and when I played something lively he seemed to become almost delirious in his gyrations. I concluded that if he had legs he would surely dance, and as it was, his motions were exceedingly graceful, and his idea of time was excellent. His eyes shone with the pleasure it was giving him, and his forked tongue fairly seemed to blaze in the ecstasy of his enjoyment. Suddenly I stopped and he seemed a very picture of sadness and disappointment. He crawled up to me and asked me to resume just as plainly as it he knew every word in the English language.

"It suddenly occurred to me that it would be an interesting experiment to see if he would follow the music. So I got up, and playing softly began to walk away. He followed me at once, and I led him along down to the church. When I unlocked the door, he followed me in without hesitation, and came right after me up into the organ loft. I then tried him with the organ, and he was even more delighted than with the concert. Finding that he would never get enough of the music I was obliged at length to drive him away by main force."

"The next day I went into the church to practice and had not been long at it when I heard a rustle on the carpet and, looking down, there was his snake taking it in and when I finished I had to drive him away again. By the next Sunday I had almost forgotten about the incident, when just as we were in the midst of the second hymn, I suddenly heard a screaming and screaming among the female members of the choir as if some one was scalping them all at once. I looked up just in time to see my friend, the snake, disappearing with a shower of hymn books and stools hurled by the male members of the choir, flying after him. However, he escaped and I said nothing about my previous acquaintance with the reptile. You may imagine that it broke up the service for a while, but finally everything quieted down and went on as usual."

"After that the snake came again for many weeks every time I practiced, but it seems that he had become convinced that it was dangerous when others were present so he never again entered the church during service, though doubtless he was listening at a safe point outside."

"Soon afterward members of the church reported that they had heard mysterious breathings of the organ at night in passing the church and it quivered whether I was practicing. I assured them that I was not. This occurred several times, and as it could not be satisfactorily explained it aroused a deal of comment and some of the more superstitious began to whisper that the church was haunted and that the spirit of a former organist was at the bottom of it. As the mystery was beginning to tell on the nerves of the neighborhood, as well as on my own, I determined to ferret it out. The music would generally sound as if someone were touching the keys with one finger, although sometimes a number of keys would be depressed simultaneously, but whenever I would enter the church I would find no one there. The organ, however, would be open, though I had left it closed when I last used it."

"One evening I determined to make a night of it and solve the mystery if it was possible. I accordingly took up a concealed position in the church shortly after dark. I was assisted somewhat by the fact that the moon shone into the building and illuminated a small space around the organ. It was no sooner fully dark than I heard a slight rustle, and a moment later saw none other than my old friend the blacksnake wiggling his way up on the piano stool. He was not alone, but was followed by half a dozen or more of his companions, who formed a shiny black mass upon the stool. You can imagine that I was amazed as I had never been before, but I resolved to await developments. The next move I noticed was that all the snakes, apparently under the direction of my old acquaintance, put their heads against the lid, and pushing all together it went up as easily as if I had lifted it myself. Then all the other snakes got down. His musical masterpiece then let down a coil and grasped a lever that started the water motor that supplied the pumping, and everything was ready.

"Then, seated called upon the stool, he began to press the keys with his head, and of course produced the corresponding notes on the instrument. Sometimes to vary this he would jump boldly upon the bank of keys and wiggle along, producing a most weird and curious jumble of sounds. As he proceeded he became more and more excited and violent, and the other snakes danced and writhed around until I could imagine what it must be to have delirium tremens. I was so interested that I let them go on for a full hour, when suddenly making a noise they all scurried away. I pretended to the members of the congregation that I had not found out what it was and thus was enabled to enjoy this novel spectacle on several preceding evenings. When I finally told them no one believed me, and I think it was partly on this account that I soon after lost my place. However, by placing a lock on the organ and stopping up all holes by which the snakes could enter the church, I put an end to the nocturnal concerts; and the people were satisfied that the ghosts, or whatever it was, had ceased to walk. After such an experience nobody can convince me that snakes do not have love of music and a taste for it."

HISTORY OF THE PHONOGRAPH.

Thomas Edison Tells What Were the First Words Recorded.

Ray Stannard Baker tells for the first time the true story of Thomas A. Edison and the invention of the phonograph. Mr. Baker visited Menlo Park recently to secure information for his Boys' Book of Inventions, which the Doubleday and McClure Company are going to bring out this fall. Mr. Edison, who has grown very deaf of late, denies himself to most callers, and Mr. Baker was obliged to secure his interview through the medium of W. S. Mallory, the inventor's right-hand man, who went with him into Mr. Edison's private office. They found him in a characteristic attitude, his fingers thrust through his thick hair and his head leaning on his hand.

"Mr. Edison," shouted Mr. Mallory, "I heard an interesting story of your invention of the phonograph the other Sunday in Brooklyn. It was in church, and the preacher said that when you were a boy you had your ear one day to the ice, and heard in the distance the sound of skates. He said that the idea first came to you that way."

Mr. Edison raised his head.
"D. D. a preacher say that?" he asked.
"Yes."

"Boo! Now I'll tell you how it happened. My model-makers all worked by piece in those days, and when I wanted a model made I always marked the price on it. In this case it was eight dollars. I had the idea of the phonograph in my mind, and I drew my design and gave it to a workman named Kruse, who finished it in thirty hours."

Kruse fitted the tin foil on the cylinder and brought the machine to me. I turned the handle and recited:

"Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow,
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go."

"Then I set the recorder back to the starting point and began to turn the cylinder. At the very best I had expected to hear nothing more than a buzzing confusion, but to my astonishment and awe the machine began to repeat in a curious, metallic voice:

"Mary had a little lamb."
Thus the first words ever spoken into the phonograph were these four simple lines of Mother Goose."

The idea of the phonograph had come to Mr. Edison with a flash of inspiration, and the machine proved its marvelous possibilities on the first trial. Few inventions have ever been conceived or carried out successfully.

Kruse's eight dollar machine," adds Mr. Baker, "which could not now be bought for hundreds of dollars, is preserved in the Patent Museum at South Kensington, England."

Mr. Ruskin's Base.

The London Outlook prints a story of Ruskin which shows that country and chivalric gentleman and great writer in a playful mood.

Mr. Ruskin was taking a morning walk down the road just in front of Brantwood, when he saw a lady seated on a cane-stool making a sketch of the house, and with a courteous grace, which is intensely his own, he addressed her, inquiring the reason for choosing the house in question for her subject.

"It is the house of the famous John Ruskin," she frankly answered.

"Have you met Ruskin?" she was asked.
"No, indeed," she replied. "If I had, I would have deemed it one of the greatest privileges of my life."

"Then, madam, if you care to follow me, I will show him to you."

In a twinkling the stool and easel were packed up, and the artist eagerly followed the guide. To her surprise and gratification, he led her up to the house, and entering had his guest follow, which she readily did. On marched the stranger into the drawing-room; then, placing his back to the fireplace, a familiar gesture, he exclaimed, to the amusement of his companion:

"Now what do you think of Ruskin?"

Still They Work

"They tell not, neither do they spin," is often replied reproachfully to the members of royal families, but not always with justice. The late Grand Duke George of Russia, younger brother of the tsar and heir apparent to the throne, although always of frail health and much taxed with court ceremonies and social functions, was an eminent student and a hard worker, and made admirable translations from English into Russian of Cousin Mahan's book, "The Influence of the Power upon History." How many men in any walk of life have achieved such a task at so early an age? For he was only twenty-eight when he died.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS

Pay the Painter
Fair wages for honest work.

BUT don't blame the painter if the paint does not last. He is not a chemist and cannot be expected to know all the qualities of materials he buys. He is not a machine and cannot mix paint as neatly as our steam mill and high-grade machinery does. Painting requires scientific knowledge and a costly plant. It reaches perfection in the works where we make it.

THE SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS

The best that can possibly be made. Tell your painter to use them. In order to secure the best quality of paint, purchase wherever they are sold in cans ready to use. The Sherwin-Williams Co., Paint and Color Makers, Canadian Dept., 21 St. Antoine St., Montreal. F. A. YOUNG, 736 Main St., North.
