HARRY ATWOOD IN SPECTACULAR FLIGHT IN NEW YORK BAY THRILLS THOUSANDS

After a series of spectacular and nerve-tending flights, in which he volplaned almost to the surface of the bay at angles that frequently caused thousands lined on the Battery shore of New York, New Jersey and Brooklyn to believe that his machine had collapsed and that he was falling to his doom, Harry M. Atwood circled the Statue of Liberty with a passenger for the first time in history. The feat was accomplished in clever fashion. The aviator showed remarkable daring by soaring above the torch at height of only five feet. He swept around it in circles, rose and fell, and then shot to Governor's Island, where he made a graceful landing while the thousands of onlookers cheered and the whistles of boats tooted.

Boston Girl's Letter

Boston, July 7.—"Conquer the weather instead of curing it," explained a young Tech man after sending to some complaints of discomfort during July's terrible heat wave. "Science has about reached the point if the public would but believe that artificial refrigeration of houses might be as common and, considering the benefits derived, as economical as plugging for the 'Heat' or 'Hot' light. If half the money that is annually wasted in Boston on the most trivial and worthless kinds of amusements could be put to the problem of making the house habitable in all climatic conditions, the saving of human energy and life would be incalculable. The sentiment seemed to the Boston girl to contain an important prediction; but alas, we are so slow in becoming civilized. More than knows what he is expected to wear for the next year or two. The National Clothing Designers' Association during its convention in Boston last week decided that clothing shall conform rigidly to 'naturalness' and 'standardization,' therefore no more the padded shoulders and the 'feminine' necklines, no more the four button cuff sleeves and a cuff. Blue is to be the color—'Blueberry blue,' which is at least an euphemism for the 'Heat' or 'Hot' light. And the shades in brown, verging to green, with stripes and quiet plaids. The Harvard student may still wear a woollen hat, but his trousers, his belt to match his suit must be laid away. There will doubtless be some changes in shoulder widths which will be quite as interesting as the perambulating waist line of the feminine form. Describing the nation's greatest 'grey' white ray of melody, medicine and the manual arts," Frederick Rice, Jr., a writer for a weekly publication, tells, under the caption of "Boston of the Music Students," how "in single words have New England, the hospitals, museums, libraries and musical auditoria representing permanent investments of more than $50,000,000 have either been given up or are being or will shortly be built." This means of course in the great Fenway district where so wonderful an educational home is being created. Besides indicating in detail what extraordinary building operations are now under way in the neighborhood of the opera house Mr. Rice gives the following description of the formation of the present music centre: "The trek to the Fenway is something recent. The Standley high schools to move to this uptown quarter, which to an earlier generation of Bostonians seemed out of town, was the New England Conservatory of Music, long housed in a brownstone building in Franklin square at the South End. Nine years only have passed since the school, one of the most venerable of the oldest and most famous of American music schools stopped in front of this capacious and well equipped building, by Huntington avenue at the point where it turns to run parallel with the Fenway. Music education is important in Boston where there are said to be 9,000 or more music students. The removal of the historic conservatory which Dr. Eben Tourjee founded in 1853, to a site long beyond that already occupied by Smythorne hall, the scene of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts, meant the establishment of a definite musical quarter in the New England city. Three dormitories for conservatory students were built on a side street overlooking the Fenway. Music studios began to appear in nearby business buildings and private residences. In less than a decade the New England Conservatory has outgrown its accommodations, the number of students having increased from about 1800 to nearly 3000. Boston now draws prospective professional musicians from every American state and many foreign countries. And just as the music school was the earliest to settle in the Fenway neighborhood, it was the first to announce an expansion. This spring the conservatory has been given an adjacent lot of land by Eben D. Jordan the Boston millionaire, for some years past a leading figure in the world's largest and best equipped conservatory of music. Eith- er more dormitories for music students or enlargement of the present dormitories is also reported to be under consideration, as part of a general campaign to induce well to do Americans to appreciate the needs of musical education. Pulling off a woman suffrage argument before the assembled solons and high brows of Harvard's Phi Beta Kappa was Witter Byrner's stunt at this year's scholarly powwow in San-

BOGUS COP PRESTIDIT FOR FRAUD

Ten Thousand Policemen Chased Louis Lewis for Eight Months—He Evaded all New York's "Finest."

New York, July 7.—After eluding ten thousand policemen for eight months, Louis Lewis, 28 years old, of No. 247 East Sixty-sixth street, who was a policeman until a year ago, when he was dismissed by Commissioner Baker, was captured yesterday by Policeman Moran of the Traffic Squad. Scores of complaints have been coming into headquarters for months from saloon and shopkeepers, who cashed alleged bogus checks presented by a man in a police uniform. Other men have been arrested on suspicion, but always have been freed. Inspector Russell's best men were sent out six months ago to capture the bogus policeman, but they were unsuccessful. It soon was established that the man wore shield No. 737, and six or eight times a policeman stationed in Greenwich street, who was the rightful possessor of shield No. 737, was summoned to headquarters to face some indignant saloon keeper who had cashed a check for $25. The man in uniform and wearing a shield of that number. Complaints became so numerous that the department finally gave the Greenwich street policeman a shield of a different number and transferred him to another precinct. General orders went out from headquarters directing every policeman in New York to be on the lookout for the man with shield No. 737. Complaints were received every few days from different sections of the city and from business men who had cashed checks for the bogus policeman, but no trace could be found of the man with the shield of that number. Most Checks Are for $35. Some of the victims reported that the man had come into their saloons with his uniform in a suit case. He would explain that he was on duty on "shoofly" duty, and would ask the privilege of changing his suit in a rear room. In almost every case reported to Police Headquarters the man had obtained cash on checks made out for $35. For eight months, it is said, he has succeeded in cashing from one to three checks each week, and Inspector Russell believes there are persons yet to be heard from. George Engle, a butcher in Barclay street, cashed a check two weeks ago for a man with shield No. 737. The check was for $35 and was returned by the bank on which it was drawn, marked N. G. While passing a saloon in West street yesterday, Mr. Engle saw Lewis and called Policeman Moran of the traffic squad, who is stationed at West and Barclay streets, August Schecker, a saloon keeper at No. 149 West street, had just cashed a check for him for $35. "So you have caught me at last," Lewis remarked when Policeman Moran placed a hand on his shoulder, according to Moran. Police Get Shield. At police headquarters Lewis told Inspector Russell, of the detective bureau, where a uniform could be found. The police also obtained shield No. 737, which has caused the department so much trouble. "I don't care what happens to me," Lewis said to Inspector Russell, "but I do hope some one will take care of my wife and child." When Lewis was arrested Moran took his prisoner to shield No. 737, at No. 146 West street to use the telephone. As Moran was leaving the store with his prisoner he happened to look on the floor. He saw, he said, he noticed fifteen checks strewn about. He picked them up. Mrs. Lewis learned of her husband's arrest by a letter from him. She visited Police Headquarters with her child. She said that her husband had never told her he had been dismissed from the police. She believed he was detailed on special work. When arraigned in Night Court Lewis was reminded in order that Inspector Russell may have an opportunity to notify the many complainants to appear in court to identify the prisoner.

HAMPTON BOY WAS PAINFULLY BURNED

Hampton, Kings County, July 7.—The adjourned session of the Kings County Court reassembled at 10 o'clock this morning. On the resumption of the court the case of a young boy was found that the infant child of Elisha Fowler, one of the jurors, died during the period of adjournment, and his mother, Mrs. Fowler, was charged with the death of the child. The charge was taken up by W. D. Turner, clerk of the court acting as prosecutor, and Geo. W. Fowler, K.C., appeared for the prisoner. The following jury was empanelled: John T. McVey, Alfred Whippley, Thomas Bell, John E. Richardson, Alan McCarty, George Coggon, C. Walter Alexander, W. H. March, Thomas Morton, Howard Clark, James W. Coates, Jeremiah Desmond. The charge which seems to have arisen out of some disagreement and misunderstanding about milling and numbering busy, was being investigated up to the time of adjournment of court, till tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. A father had burning accident occurred at two o'clock this afternoon, when young John Humphrey, youngest son of the late Frank M. and Mrs. Thomas Humphrey, while playing with other youngsters on the back street, got the fringe of his Indian suit on fire. The blaze caught the left sleeve and side of dress and blinding he ran into a nearby back yard. His screams were heard and neighbors ran to his relief. A piece of carpet was quickly wrapped about him, and the blaze extinguished, but the left arm was found to be very badly burned as well as a patch on the left side. Two nurses from the Wayside Inn were quickly on the ground, and rendered first aid until Drs. Smith and Wetmore arrived and attended to the sufferer, who will no doubt be laid up for some time.
