Uncle Walt The Poet Philosopher

I stood, in the sweet, soft gloaming, alone by the pasture bars and there, with a deep emotion, I gazed at the glowing stars, and my bosom was filled with yearning for better MEDITATIONS and higher things, and I wished that my soul might journey up there on its shining wings. T roam in the maze of planets! To follow the starry track! Then bag of sand from an airship fell on me and broke my back. I stood on the frozen river, and thought of the prisoned stream, that jour neyed along beneath me, shut out from the sunlight's gleam, "How much like my own existence." I mused, "is this river's flow! Shut out from the rays of sunshine, and doomed to the dark below! How much like this sullen river, concealed from Dame Nature's smiles-Then I stepped in an unseen airhole, and drowned in a dozen styles. Whenever I pause to ponder on problems that vex the soul, catas trophes always happen, and put me deep in the hole. And so I shall cease to question the streams and the heavens dumb; I'll kick up my heels and gambol, and take things as they come.
