J. L. STEWART, EDITOR.
SATURDAY EVENING, JAN. 24, 1872.

It was reported, lately, that Prince Arthur wanted to go to the Gold Coast with Wolsley, and was prevented by the Queen. Her Majesty made a great mistake in cutting the military ardor of her son. His presence at the spot of war would have added much to the strength of the Royal Family in England, and his death on the field would have been an extinguisher, for a time at least, on the Broadland element. If the Queen will take our advice, she will allow her warlike son to take the field so soon as he likes. Her sons should go forth, occasionally, for more serious conquest than the one achieved by Prince Alfred. A Royal Family cannot hope to continue popular unless its blood is spilled in battle once in a century at least. We desire to see royally maintained in England, as we fear that republicanism would bring her to Spanish chaos, and we warn the Queen that it is a serious mistake on her part to allow her material feelings to interfere between Arthur and his military desires. The people know all about princely horse racing, princely presiding over public meetings, princely charities, princely entertainments, and they are hungry to know something of princely fighting. Arthur, skimming in the African bush, would be greater respect to the throne than a hundred British garrisons or any number of brilliant foreign matches. Suppose we raise the company of Canadian Volunteers Sir Garnet has been signing for, and offer Prince Arthur the command. Their exploits would do much for the consolidation of the empire.

There is a general expression of regret at the retirement of Mr. Jones, as his election was confidently looked forward to by his friends. He is a much better public speaker than Mr. Ellis, who has made his own capacity to speak, and Mr. Jones's alleged want of capacity for speaking, the chief reason for nominating himself. Mr. Jones, in his two public appearances, has awakened a great deal of enthusiasm and shown that he has great personal strength. He is not so conceited nor so ambitious as another member of the party he is so unfortunate as to belong to, and does not care to run for the mere notoriety of the thing, now that the Ministerialists have concentrated on Mr. Burpee and Palmer. The contest seems to be settled by the retirement of Mr. Jones, and no one now doubts the election of Mr. Palmer and the Minister of Customs. Many enemies of Mr. Burpee, of his own party, will vote for Mr. Ellis, but the majority of his party will plump Mr. Burpee over Burpee and Palmer. This is the ticket we proposed at the start. Mr. Jones might have led Mr. Burpee, but there does not seem to be any chance for Mr. Ellis.

Mr. Anglin, happy man, has no opposition in the Liberal ranks, and he has shown to show himself to the people who choose him as their representative and talk to them about the situation. Mr. Anglin will not promise to give the present Government a liberal support, no matter how much he may say against their proceedings.

Two young people, whose parents happen to be Sovereigns, have been indulging in the pious luxury of getting married, and much popular rejoicing over the event has been manifested by a lavish expenditure of money in the capital. We were not invited to the wedding, and do not intend to celebrate it.

The burning of the Pacific survey papers, just when Ministers were declaring that the road could not be built, reminds us of a Quebec paper of the sinking of the Virginia when the Government didn't know what was to be done with her. Remarkable coincidences often happen.

Much indignation has been excited by Mr. Mackenzie's statement that Chinese laborers are to be imported for the building of the western extension of the Northern Pacific Railway, and the extension from Fort Garry to the Mackenzie Silver Mines.

A precocious Sunday school juvenile has given promissory notes of rationalism by his comment on the prodigal son's banking after the lusk the swine did eat, "Why didn't he kill a pig and make some bacon?" queries our little infidel.

Meyer Cobb, of Boston, on Tuesday received a letter from the Hon. J. M. Spence, the Mayor of the city under immediate demand of all sorts of public works for the benefit of the workmen to be employed thereon. He declined to accept their views, however.

There is very little Transatlantic pleasure travel now, and none of the outgoing or incoming steamers have more than a dozen cabin passengers at a time. "Georgie traffic" is also at the expense of running steamers now is unusually heavy.

The fashionable exodus to Europe will commence this year as early as April. From all we hear the number of New Yorkers, who contemplate spending the Summer abroad is quite as large as last year, and the human exposition will be the chief attraction.

We hear that the Liverpool Board of Trade are about to issue imperative orders to the owners of the Transatlantic steamships relative to the life boats being covered and placed inaccessible during voyages. Hereafter the boats are to be swung over the sides of the ship and kept ready for immediate launching.

The Manager of the General Mining Association announces that the Association has registered its trade mark, "Spotted Dog," and cautions proprietors of mines, agents, and dealers in coal against using the same to designate coal which has not been raised from the mines of the Association, as all persons infringing such trade mark will be prosecuted.—Halifax Express.

A Lunatic Ball.
From the New Haven Register.
In the recent annual ball at the Lunatic Asylum, twenty couples took the floor, ranged in two lines, facing each other, and stood still in profound silence, waiting the music. In this party the strangeness of the performers was most apparent. The men wore a look upon their faces of such resolution as one would expect on that of a brave man brought face to face with some terrible danger. The women were more wandering in their glances; but nearly all were serious. The music first forth and a simultaneous movement followed; all sorts of movements, some cultivated steps, but for the most part a mere violent shuffling exercise. Directly they all seemed to have forgotten that they had partners, and set down into dancing. There was some peculiarity about every individual, but the most curious was observed in a young man, one might say, a young girl, who had a black hair hanging loosely around her neck, and she had a look of such a part in other scenes, but at the commencement of the ball she turned around her, she would resume her motions. Some of them kept their eyes fixed on the right side, others on the left; others kept a watch upon their feet, which, to the bewildered minds, were perhaps going and astray. Very soon the organization broke up; the original partners wandered off in various directions, and the ball, but with instinctive gallantry on the one side and gentle acquiescence on the other, they were not without a few who ever lady happened to be with reach at the moment when they thought of "swinging round their partner."

The Minister of Customs held a meeting in the Engine House, Portland, last evening, commencing about 9 o'clock. Messrs. D. W. Clark and James Harris addressed the meeting, which broke up in some confusion.
Mr. Palmer held a meeting in Carleton last night, and his friends organized for the campaign.

Mr. Jones Burpee—Def. Faith of the Ministerialists—Re-Examination.
Smith's Hall was crowded to excess last evening by electors anxious to understand the peculiar position of the "reform" party. J. V. Troop, Esq., was called to the chair, and, in a few words explained that the meeting was an adjourned one of Mr. Jones's friends, to inquire into the situation, and hear Mr. Jones's decision as to retiring. The Hon. Isaac Burpee was in the room, and he would first call on him to rise and explain how such a rupture had occurred in the party. The announcement that Mr. Burpee was in the room created some surprise, it not being known to the majority of those present, though Mr. Jones, on his entrance, had been greeted with loud cheers.

On rising the Hon. Minister of Customs was greeted with mingled cheers and groans. He said he had been called here to settle a difficulty that had, through some cause, arisen in the Reform party. He freely acknowledged his inability to do so. When returning from Ottawa the nominations of the committee were first read by him. He attended a meeting on Saturday last and was the only one of the electors who was present. His friends attended other meetings, and organized for themselves without his knowledge. (A voice, "You knew all about.") "If I did I confess I cannot control ward committees. (Roars of laughter.) The electors of St. John are in politics. I did not seek it. (Renewed laughter.) As far as politics are concerned I can live without them. I'll fight the battle to the end, but thank God, I am a without politics and if defeated can return to private life. I am one of your men who have to hang round the corridors of the Parliament buildings at Ottawa to solicit votes for any party."

The Hon. Minister declared he had not seen the contest and honorably and faithfully and honestly conducted it. ("Yes, for yourself" from a dozen voices.) He had nothing to do with his movements, and could not control them. What he had done, he had done fairly. (Cries of "you haven't," during which Mr. Burpee took his seat.) Mr. Jones then took the platform and said he would honestly and fairly state what had happened. He had immediately after his nomination, an interview with the Hon. A. J. Smith and the Hon. Isaac Burpee, in the office of the latter.

He had ratified the ticket and agreed to a mass meeting in the afternoon, to be held at 11 o'clock, in order to see what he had done to the party. He had informed them he could do nothing until Monday. On that day he had, by advice of Mr. Burpee, gone to the country, and canvassed right through for the ticket. On his return he had been surprised to find Ward Committees entirely ignoring himself. By whose authority, he would ask, and for what purpose were these committees appointed? (A hundred voices—"for what you do.") Such was his belief, and under these circumstances, he tendered his resignation. ("Don't you do it"—"run it alone," &c.) "I'll back you," with loud cheers were heard from all parts of the room.

Mr. Jones said he had no desire to run alone. ("Oh, we can't give you up," and loud cheers.) He thanked the electors for their kindness; thanked those who had promised him their votes; those who had promised him, and firmly declined to run.

Daniel W. Clark was the next speaker, and was received with hisses and groans. He tried, for some time, to get a hearing, but, though he has stentorian lungs, his voice was drowned in the confusion that followed his appearance. He had, however, J. W. Scamman asked Mr. Clark why he, as a friend of Mr. Burpee's, had not come out before in favor of Mr. Jones.

Mr. Clark—"I did, and have done so right through the canvass by Mr. Burpee's direction." ("Lies! lies!" and hisses, with loud cheers.)
Mr. Skinner commenced his address by saying that "the ticket had gone up. Mr. Jones, as in a game all understand, might have gone it alone.—He had, in fact, a full hand, and could have seen any one else go better. Mr. Jones, he remarked, had given up the contest, and the electors could now say who should serve them. (Voice—"Lawyer Freeman and Ellis.") The present condition of political parties was referred to—the changes that had taken place—and the speaker said that Mr. Palmer who, a few days ago, might not have been sure of election, was now the strongest candidate before the electors. (Loud cheers for Palmer and cries of "that is so.") The speaker discussed at some length the position of the Liberal party, until the audience began to grow impatient and called "question." Mr. Skinner took the hint, and spoke for a few minutes to the question. He had never before heard of a man seeking to be a representative who could not control his ward committees. If such a man aspired to be a minister of the Crown he could only say that the Crown was better without such a man. (Cheers.) If he was the one seeking election he would say to the electors "I will not run." He spoke of his first election, when J. W. Cuddy went through the county and said "vote for Skinner if you vote for me." Mr. Ellis was next greatly touched by the speaker. Some men were ambitious to enter Parliament, but he did not like to see a man so ambitious as to spoil his party for the sake of preference. He closed with a striking appeal to the electors to vote for the best man. The Minister of Customs had led the hall by this time. Mr. Jones was loudly called for and urged to withdraw his resignation. He thanked them for the love they had shown him and the honor heaped on him. He had been nominated by a party, the party had gone back on him, and he would not run.

Three cheers were given for Mr. Jones, three for the chairman, and the meeting was adjourned. The audience were not satisfied, and other speakers were called. G. R. Pugeley, Esq., made a statement, defining his position and his reasons for retiring.

Sport then commenced, and a man who had imbibed too much was lifted on the platform and made his little speech. He was hoisted off and on, the crowd surged from one side of the hall to the other, tumbling over chairs, and making confusion worse confounded. The gas was turned down, and the audience dispersed.

Will Life in the Far West.
This volume pretends only to give the personal adventures of a Border Hunter in his own language, and comprises a hunting and trapping adventures with Kit Carson and other border heroes. It opens with the story of the author's captivity and life among the Comanches, including his marriage with "Spotted Fawn," the daughter of the Comanche chief. It details services under Colonel Doniphan in the war with Mexico, and gives a pretty full history of the Church revolution in Mexico, and the subsequent overthrow of the Maximilian usurpation, with many thrilling affairs on land and water. The writer makes no pretension to literary merit, and claims only truthful narrative for this work. The subject matter of the work is of sufficient interest to recompense for any lack of rhetorical flourish.—Register, Penn.

Grand Court.
The first witness in the Munroe assault case called in the afternoon, yesterday, was Stephen Munroe, brother of the prisoner. He went out of his house about 11 o'clock, and was going to Indiantown to see what the boys were doing, when he met his brother coming from that direction.

Angus Riley was said by Miss McCarthy to be the greatest sleepy head she ever saw. He denied it, but said on the night in question he did doze from 10 till 12 o'clock, while young Van Burpee took a nap. While he was awake there was a constant stream of carriages along the Bridge Road.

Van Van Burpee's story about the tears was the same as the other witness's. On cross-examination he did not think there were more than thirty an hour, or thirty in the three hours from 9 to 12, during which he took toll. The account for that night was lost. The witness stated that Riley left of taking toll at 9 o'clock, while Riley swore he left at 10 o'clock. Notwithstanding this difference of an hour they swore to a minute to the time in which certain teams passed. The jury were allowed to separate on condition that they should speak to no one about the trial.

The prisoner was admitted to ball on his own and his father's recognition, which he refused to give. His case was valued at $1,000, to appear Monday. His mother and sisters were in waiting at the door for him. His Portland friends received him with cheers, and hired a sleigh and drove him home. The case will be continued Monday.

Heart Disease.
HALIFAX, Feb. 10th, 1872.
MR. JAMES L. FELLOWS—Dear Sir: In order that some other sufferer may be benefited, you are at liberty to give this letter publicity.
In the winter of 1869 I was taken ill with Disease of the Heart, accompanied by violent palpitation, and from that time gradually became weaker, notwithstanding continued professional attendance, up to a few weeks ago, when your Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites was recommended to me. The use of it during a very short time enabled me to resume my usual work, and now I am as well, fat and hearty as I could wish to be. Yours very truly,
W. FRANK COCHRAN.

The heart brings great muscular organ, requires vigorous nervous force to sustain it. As Fellow's Hypophosphites restores the nervous element, it will always strengthen the heart weakened through loss of this element.
