

I.—BRITISH COLUMBIA.

AINSWORTH.

F. J. H. BENNETT.

Situated on Kootenay Lake, B.C., at the base of the foothills of the Selkirks, is the little mining camp of Ainsworth. The inhabitants are composed of all nationalities whom the yellow god has allured into this wilderness. A number have come from Christian homes, but in too many cases the saloons and other wanton snares, which beset their path, have succeeded in blunting conscience, and have all but blotted out the memory of the associations of earlier and better days.

It was here that our missionary, the late Mr. F. J. H. Bennett, labored with great success. During his brief stay so untiring was his zeal for the work of the Master, and for the welfare of his fellow men, that he won a lasting place in the hearts of all. His sudden death caused much real sorrow among those to whom he had endeared himself, and their wish to perpetuate his memory has been shown by the people in erecting a monument in the little graveyard at Ainsworth where he is laid to rest.

ENGLISHMAN'S RIVER, B.C.

D. A. MCKERACHER.

This field is situated on the east coast of Vancouver Island, about 100 miles north of Victoria. The community is composed of pioneer farmers who are endeavoring to make homes for themselves and their families in the woods. The settlement is yet small and scattered, but there are some earnest Christian people who are anxious for the privileges of Gospel services. At each station the place of meeting is a school-house.
