

grace came to her will, O God, but r to the day of her d for the salvation tion of education, other good work, press, or otherwise, es and excited her prosperity of his n dark clouds ens the ministering him on in the face pastoral life were ment of her man- and her quiet devo- useful, gradually and imparted an l life that will ex- on.

ten months of pas- greatly blessed, she es and friendships For ten years we et Baptist Church, ry and unflagging est interests of the or by night, to ad- necessities of others.

In her later connections with the church in Carleton, the enfeebled state of her health has not permitted her to take any active part in church duties, but any indications of prosperity in Zion always gladdened her spirit and inspired her with gratitude to the giver of all good.

But the sphere in which she shone above all others was in the engagements and responsibilities of the family circle. There she sat as a queen upon her throne, giving instruction, guidance and discipline that preserved the most perfect order and harmony, and imparted her will with imperceptible but resistless energy to the hearts and lives of all around her. The infant upon her breast, the lad of gleeful mirthfulness, the young girl of dawning ambitions, and the full grown young man and maiden were alike controlled by the motion of her finger or the glance of her piercing eye. System was the first law of her being—it extended to every minutiae of household arrangement—frequently in some prominent place in her children's bed chambers, we were accustomed to see inscribed in large letters, "A PLACE FOR EVERYTHING, AND EVERYTHING IN ITS PLACE." Her conscientiousness, or keen sense of the distinction between right and wrong, greatly aided her in the discipline of her household. The slightest prevarication or attempt to deceive, or any exaggeration of statement or suppression of facts to colour a story, was instantly