OUR TWO OPINIONS.

Us two was boys when we fell out,
Nigh to the age of my youngest now.
Don't recollect what was about,
Some small difference, I'll allow.
Lived next neighbor twenty years,
A-hatin' each other, me 'nd Jim;
He havin' his opinin uv me,
'nd I havin' my opinin uv him.

Grew up together 'nd wouldn't speak,
Courtin' sisters, 'nd marr'd em; too,
Tended same meetin' house once a week,
A-hatin' each other, through and through.

But when Abouhagan asked the West sisters, we answered, me an' Jim,
'nd he havin' his opinin uv me,
'nd I havin' my opinin uv him.

But down in Tennessee one night
There was sound uv firin' 'nd way 'e a fight
With the Johnnie Rebs some time next day;
'nd I was thinkin' of Lizzie 'nd home,
He stood afore me, long an' alone;
He havin' his opinin uv me,
'nd I havin' my opinin uv him.

Seemed like we knew there was goin' to be
Serious trouble fr me an' him;
Uz two shuck hands, did Jim 'nd me,
But never a word from me or Jim.
He wend his way 'nd I went mine,
'nd into the battle row went we,
I havin' my opinin uv Jim,
'nd he havin' his opinin uv me.
Jim never came back from the war again,
But I hain't forgot that last, last night,
When waitin' fr orders, uz two men
Made up an' shuck hands afore the light.

'nd after all, it's soothin' to know
That I be 'nd yonder Jim;
He havin' his opinin uv me,
'nd I havin' my opinin uv him.

"A Forgotten Northern Fortress."

The sixteenth century closed with the western waterway to the Indies which all men sought who went "down to the sea" in the quaintly rigged, queerly built ships of the period, undiscovered; and the earlier days of the seventeenth found the ardour of search unabated and the goal the same. English kings and queens choosing more northern routes than had the monarchs of Spain and France, failed as they had, none Henry the Eighth sent the Venetian Cabot who found Labrador barring the way. Elizabeth sent Frobenius who turning his northern flank, found only the ice-blocked straits which bear his name. Davis and Plymouth followed, but it was reserved for the brilliant Hudson to discover and sail into a strait, apparently on the direct route to the west, which opened into a wide sea; that daring mariner must have thought the secret of two centuries unbroken, and he fancied that through fog and mist he had reached the fabled breezes of Cathay. In 1610 mariners were not so easily daunted by wreck and ruin; and Hudson's tragic fate in the great sea he had discovered did not deter further search, for in the year 1629 followed, the frightened Esquimaux, fleeing to his kayak to relate to the old men of his band the strange apparition which glided white through the mist, and was not the sheen of berg or floe, had but seen the sails of other adventurers who still sought the men had been seeking for three generations in vain.

Button and Blyot, Baffin, James and Fox, Hawkebridge and Jones all failed to find the desired passage, and Zeebich, Capt. Zacharias Gilliam, of New England, accompanied by M. de Grossier, sailed into the bay in 1668 we may suppose that the English merchants who sent him had in view as well as the Northwest passage, those rich furs which, brought back by other voyagers, had begun to excite the ambition of the British government for failing to protect their factory at Chitchee, and when again peace was proclaimed, it was after the French plenipotentiaries had agreed to settle the bill for LaPerouse's capture and the demolition of Fort Prince of Wales. It was never rebuilt, and the station in that far off northern coast the still well preserved remains of a massive fortification, the most northern one of British America, scarcely inferior as site to Louisbourg or early Quebec; its site admirably chosen, its design and armament once perfect, but interesting now only as a relic of bygone strife, useful now only as a beacon for the harbor it had failed to protect.

THE CONVICT'S STORY.

BY LUKE SHARP.

The Philanthropic Visitor to the prison was very much impressed with the appearance of one of the convicts. He did not look like an evil man. There was intelligence in his face. The Philanthropic Visitor got permission to speak to him, and he soon found from the convict's conversation that he was a man of education. The visitor spoke kindly to him for a few minutes, and at last asked how he came to be in such a place. The convict sighed and said:

"Unless you are a smoker of tobacco I am afraid you will not appreciate the causes and effects which led to my being here. I refuse to tell my story to anyone who is not a smoker."

The visitor acknowledged that he liked a cigarette occasionally, and the convict accordingly went on with his sad recital.

"Well, sir," said the convict, "I began on cigarettes when I was a boy and gradually worked up to cigars and finally took to a pipe. I smoked incessantly; it seemed to soothe me. In my business worries and although people warned me of the injurious effect on my health, I paid no heed to them. At last, however, I fell a victim to a nervous disorder, and I called on a noted specialist from New York. Two living in Virginia at the time. The specialist told me that I must stop smoking, otherwise it would be the direct cause of my death. If you are a smoker, sir, you have tried to stop at least two or three times since you first took to the weed. You know, then, how it is with me. After the doctor had given me his orders I began a desperate struggle with the habit. My trial was an utter failure. You see smoking had become automatic with me. When I went down town I would enter a cigar store and buy some cigars and be smoking before I quite realized what I was doing. So finding that I could not break the habit, I was frank with my doctor and told him that it was very evident that I must die. I asked him how long he would give me to live if I smoked as much as usual. He said about three months. This was very serious. I did not wish to die of course, but knew that I could not stop the habit of smoking."

"Is there not some antidote for the habit, or can you give me something else to take the place of tobacco?" I asked.

"Oh all you require," he said, "is a little strength of will. I should think that a man of your powers would soon overcome the habit of the weed."

"This was all he knew about it. Never smoked himself, he had no idea of the strength of the habit when indulged in for years. At last I convinced him that no strength of will I had would enable me to quit the pernicious practice."

"I will think it over," he said, "and will see what we can do."

"You see, sir, it was before the days of the gold cure, and I could get no help from drugs to break my bonds. Two or three days after the doctor came to me and said:

"There is a ship in the harbor which sails soon for San Francisco, which is a voyage of several months. The captain is an old friend of mine and has never touched liquor or tobacco. You are a rich man and can arrange terms with him. He will get together a crew that do not use tobacco in any form. This, as you know, will be a difficult matter. You will be six months or so getting round the Horn, and if you take half a dozen cigars with you, that the impulse will come upon you until you are well out at sea, I venture to say that you will be cured of the habit before you reach San Francisco."

"I met the captain that night, and we speedily came to terms. The doctor now allowed me to smoke until I went on board the ship. Things were very pleasant for the first few days, but I had plenty of cigars with me. Reason told me that I could use my cigars sparingly, and should have smoked one or two a week, but as I told you I had no self-control, and I smoked them more rapidly, one after another, until they were all gone. Then came purgatory. I found that the captain had kept to his contract only too well, and that there was not one of the crew who used tobacco in any form. I tried bribery and everything else with them but it was all of no use, for though they were quite willing to be bribed, there was no tobacco among them. They had not known what kind of passenger was coming aboard, and did not guess the money that might be made by the possession of the weed. As the voyage went on, my case became worse and worse, and to make my torture greater I had my pipe in my pocket. I resolved to smoke anything that would burn in a pipe; so one day when the captain was out on deck, I provided myself with a tin of snuff and a tin of tobacco. He was not a reading man and there were no books on board. I was afraid to tear any business papers as it might cause trouble, but I knew bills of lading were done in duplicate, and there were some newspapers in a tin. I tore up one of the papers in a twinkling and stuffed some of the paper in my pipe. I glanced over it to see what it was that I might write it out again if it became necessary to do so. I could not believe my eyes when I read. It was the bill of lading of that schooner which was the cargo of a tobacco ship. Anyone who smokes knows what a terrible temptation it must have been."

"Oh, that man," said the governor, "raising his eyebrows. 'He is not in for breaking cargo; he is a novelist and is doing time for murdering a critic. It was brought in justifiable homicide, and he merely told you the latest yarn that ran through his brain. He never smoked in his life.'"

AND ONE OF THE MOST ELOQUENT PULPIT ORATORS OF HIS TIME.

Few men have a warmer place in the affections of the Methodists of the lower provinces than Rev. Dr. Pope, who after an arduous life in the ministry has been called to rest in the arms of his heavenly Father. His death is a great loss to the church. His life was a life of self-sacrifice and of devotedness to his people. His death is a great loss to the church. His life was a life of self-sacrifice and of devotedness to his people.

It has often been contended by physiologists and men of science generally, that nervous energy or nervous impulses which pass along the nerve fibres, were only other names for electricity. This seemingly plausible statement was accepted for a time, but has been completely abandoned since it has been proved that the nerves are not good conductors of electricity, and that the velocity of a nervous impulse is but 100 feet per second—which is very much slower than that of electricity. It is now generally agreed that nervous energy, or what we are pleased to call nerve fluid, is a wondrous, a mysterious force, in which dwells life itself.

A very eminent specialist, who has studied profoundly the workings of the nervous system for the last twenty-five years, has lately demonstrated that two-thirds of all our ailments and chronic diseases are due to deranged nerve centres within or at the base of the brain.

All know that an injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis to the body below the injured point. The reason for this is, that the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion.

Again, when food is taken into the stomach, it comes in contact with numerous nerve fibres, the fluid of this organ, which at once send a nervous impulse to the nerve centres which control the stomach, notifying them of the presence of food; whereupon the nerve centres send down a supply of nerve force or nerve fluid, to at once begin the operation of digestion. But let the nerve centres which control the stomach be deranged and they will not be able to respond with a sufficient supply of nerve force, to properly digest the food, and, as a result, indigestion and dyspepsia make their appearance. So it is with the other organs of the body, if the nerve centres which control them and supply them with nerve force become deranged, they are also deranged.

The wonderful success of the remedy known as the Great South American Nervine Tonic is due to the fact that it is prepared by one of the most eminent physicians and specialists of the age, and is based on the foregoing scientific discovery. It possesses marvellous powers for the cure of Nervousness, Nervous Prostration, Headache, Sleeplessness, Restlessness, St. Vitus's Dance, Mental Dependancy, Hysteria, Heart Disease, Nervousness of Females, Hot Flashes, Sick Headache. It is also an absolute specific for all stomach troubles.
