The Last of Cook.

It is about time we heard the last attained the of Dr. Cook and his pretensions. The Kinley. University of Copenhagen, which appointed a committee of experts to examine the proof that Dr. Cook himself placed before them, declare that Dr. Cook later told Prof. Parker that the documents afford no satisfactory evidence. Some of the experts who examined Cook's proofs have not hesitated to describe the whole of the Polar case worthless and fraudulent.

But the most clinching blow to his claim to serious consideration is the action of the Board of Governors of the Explorers' Club. The Board has not had Dr. Cook's polar claims under consideration, but quite another matter, viz., his claim that he ascended the summit of Mount McKinley in

The committee of the Club has been investigating Dr. Cook's claim of reaching the top of Mt. McKinley, and reported that it must be rejected as unworthy of credence.

The committee consisted of many evidence of his guide, who also declared Cook did not climb Mt. Mc-Kinley, and based the findings or facts which showed that no credence could be given to statements made by Cook.

Individual-signed reports are submitted by Herschel C. Parker, profes sor of physics at Columbia, and Bel more Brown, both of whom were Dirty Kidneys members of the Cook-McKinley expedition, and by Charles Sheldon, who has recently returned from a year' residence on the slope of Mount Mc Kinley, where he went with the express purpose of studying the configuration of the mountain, with a view to the possibility of its ascent.

Prof. Barker reports that he was a partner with Dr. Cook in the McKinley expedition, both physically and financially. Dr. Cook assumed the lead, with a plan which proved unfeasible, and the party only got out with their lives, thanks to the local knowledge of Belmore Brown, one of

'It was perfectly understood,' says Prof. Parker, 'that after this misadventure all further attempts were abandoned for the season, otherwise Prof. Parker would not have left the

Instead of this, Dr. Cook, it is charged, sidetracked all members of the expedition, until there remained only Cook, his guide Barrill, and one packer, who was subsequently got rid of also. These defections left Dr. Cook, says Prof. Parker, no instrutudes he says he attained. Moreover, It is needless to feel miserable and he adds, the summer's experience had shown that of all the party, Cook and Barrill were the least gifted physically for arduous mountaineering.

Belmore Brown in the main confirms Prof. Parker, and says in addition that in Dr. Cook's book there is it. not one date given from the time he aneroid barometer reading during the of your confidence,

Cook was known to be in serious fi- one feel fine, aska had he not reported that he had where in the world.

Brown revamps his charges with the declaration that Cook and Barrill had no ice-creepers, and that, though he and Barrill were roped together for every foot of the last stages, Prof. Parker and Brown both remembered that they had destroyed the climbing rope as defective before they quit the expedition. Furthermore, in none of the pictures published in Dr. Cook's book does a climbing rope show.

Brown and Sheldon also report that various photographs in Dr. Cook's book do not represent the peaks they are said to picture, and Sheldon denies that he is the author of the appendix C in the book, which Dr. Cook credited to him.

The committee as a whole therefore concludes in part that:

'Dr. Cook's account of the ascent is not only such as to be unconvincing to the experienced mountaineer, but distinguished men. It disregarded the under analysis it becomes incredible. 'That he entered into a secret financial agreement with a publisher. which resulted in embarrassment to his associates.

'That he broke his agreements' before his fellow club members to supply his original photographs and data upon which his book was based.'

Man Killed at

On Christmas Eve an awful accident ccurred at Twillingate, the result of which was the death of a fine young man named Marsh, aged 18. The poor chap had been cutting wood for weeks winter's supply, and he was piling hem near his home on the day mentioned. He and his father had just put up some of the heaviest sticks on top of the pile, when through some that large congregations will attend defect in the piling the whole thing gave way. The father saw it start. and yelled to his son to jump clear, but before the young man could do felt that a good beginning for a good so, the pile came down with a rush and completely covered him. Men about the place took him out after great exertion, and he lived only a very short while. The body was terribly broken up. The poor young fel-

The annual meeting of the Labrado Whaling and Manufacturing Company was held in Messrs. Hearn & Co's office last night. Messrs. D. A. Ryan W. D. Reid, Jas. Ryan, Jno. Henderson and Hon. Jno. Harris were elected as directors. A dividend of 5 per cent. was declared. Last year a dividend of 171/2 per cent. was declared. The Cachelot, the vessel operating for the company, having sustained an accident to her propeller, last summer caused her to lay up for repairs for two weeks. This occurred at a season when fish were plentiful, and accounts in a great measure for the comparative smallness of the dividend this year. The company are pleased, however, with the general condition of affairs and they added $3,000 to the reserve after working off $2,000 for depreciation of the ship.

The holiest men and most devoted women of every age felt this same spirit, hence we find that in all their writings there is a deep spirit of penitence, humiliation, and also confession of sin. Placentia Notes.

The weather here the past week has been anything but agreeable: Storms from all points of the compass have raged, accompanied by both rain and snow. Huge trees that have stood the storms of the last century have been uprooted and hurled across the public streets, while wharves, fences and houses have been more or less damaged by the storms. We hope that we shall not be visited again by such severe storms for some time.

Some fifty feet of the breastwork at blockhouse have been washed away by the sea during the past week, while a huge tree has been laying on the ground in the C. E. graveyard and also a flagpole. Another large tree has been uprooted and hurled to the ground near Z. Bindon's store. A boat belonging to Mr. D.
