He has a picture in this year's Academy, "The Wounded Captain," shows continuous pleasure in the exercise of his talent. He remembered Dickens as a "bright, lively, young man, good looking and with dark, flowing locks, whom he met when he was a child in Behnes's studio. He first exhibited in the Royal Academy in 1852, when the Pre-Raphaelites were showing their strongest work. He was much influenced by the brethern, and the pictures he painted under hat influence are his chief claims to the attention of posterity. "The Widowed Bride" and "The Bride's Burial," painted at that period, are probably his most living works. In pointments as well as successes, but contemporaries. He enjoyed the golden age of English academic art which extended from the sixties to considered a being apart, an ornament to any dinner-table, and a man deserving of a velvet dress jacket and pretty daughters, and a large house with lawns. City (London's financial and banking district) bought his pictures and courted his society, and there were no nasty art critics or irreconcilable art society who challenged the academic system and affronted it in the market-or, if there were such revolutionaries, the City paid no attention to them, and

St. Patrick's Church was the scene of a very pretty wedding yesterday afternoon when the marriage of Miss Sidney Jean ,eldest daughter of the late John V. Gamberg, Esq., and Mr. Paul Maddox, of Bay Bulls, took place. The wedding, which was performed by Rev. Father Renouf, was a very quiet one, only the immediate relatives of both parties being present. The bride was charmingly attired in a costume of taupe broadcloth, and was attended by her sister Mrs. W. A. French, of Brigus, while the groom was ably supported by his brother Mr. Stephen Maddox. The presents received were numerous and costly, testifying to the esteem in which the bride is held. After the
