WET SUMMER SEASON HARD ON SEASIDE RESORTS, BUT BOON TO LONDON

Money That Would Have Been Expended at the Watering Places Has Remained at Home; Smoking Habit Spreads Among Women; 1915 Exhibition

(By W. Hamilton Rhodes)
LONDON, Sept. 11.—The wet summer season has been a great boon to London. While seaside holiday resorts generally are bemoaning their unhappy lot and metaphorically wringing their hands over the thousands of pounds which this year have failed to come their way, London, and particularly that part of West London which lies around Piccadilly and the great parks, is basking in damp prosperity. Many thousands of pounds which in a fine summer would have been carried away from the metropolis to the coast resorts and to the continent have remained "in town," where they are being scattered royally, and the beneficial effects are being felt by all the West-end shops, theatres, restaurants, and tradesmen. Particularly has this been the case during the last six weeks, during which a regular "spending wave" seems to have swept over London. Theatres have announced "standing room only" regularly night by night, the music halls report record houses, restaurants are packed to the last and most out-of-the-way table, and they usually do in a month at this period of the year.

The explanation of this unaccountable spending energy put forward by the manager of a famous West-end restaurant, was a very simple one. "People have been hoarding up their money to go away for a holiday," he said, "and now, after waiting in vain all the summer for a spell of fine weather, they have decided to give up the idea of a visit to the seaside and are having a good time in town instead. And so our theatres and restaurants are being filled, and our shopkeepers have been unkindly diverted the golden river which would otherwise have flowed down to the sea."

Of course the conditions which have operated to prevent people from leaving London have also to some extent resulted in a greater number of visitors coming to London. But the margin has been all on the side of the capital, for a great many people have, after all, come to London for the very reason that their amusement is plentiful. The bad summer has also stimulated the sale of novels and general literature, and publishers are reveling in the rainy and dark evenings.

St. Paul's cathedral is being fire-proofed. This great national fabric, whose safety from subterranean subsidence and fire has been the perpetual concern of architects and surveyors in the past, is today being equipped with the latest and most extensive appliances of any public building in the world. It is hoped that when the work is complete a repetition of such disasters as befell the earlier structures in 1588 and 1596 will be beyond the region of possibility.

The intelligent foreigner who visits London must frequently find himself puzzled by the many statues which he comes across in the parks and public squares, puzzled because in so many cases, if any information is obtainable from the inscription on the pedestal as to why the individual in question should be thus honored. "Viscount Palmerston," "Lord Derby, 1793-1869," "Clive 1725-1774," are the brief words of the inscriptions on the memorials which bear these names, and there the matter ends. To the foreigner London is full of mystery, and there are some which still baffle Englishmen. There is, for instance, the statue in Trinity Square, Southwark, said to represent Alfred the Great. The crowned figure of stone is over five feet high and is dressed in robes with a girdle at the waist, the robes are gathered up in the left hand, and a mantle, fastened at the throat, is worn. Nothing is known as to its origin. It is said to represent Alfred the Great, but there is no valid ground for this assumption.

A large number of Americans have visited Cumberland this season to see the great grape vine, which is one of the largest and most celebrated in the kingdom, being even larger and finer than the famous vine at Hampton Court. The tree yields between 500 and 600 bunches of grapes, averaging 4 lb. to 5 lb. each, and some even turn the scale at 6 lb. The vine is 120 ft. in length and 20 ft. wide, and covers a roof of over 2,000 ft. It is nearly 150 years old, and is still reckoned one of the best in Europe. All one time it yielded as many as 2,000 bunches of grapes in a single season, but the quality was not nearly so good as since the number has been more limited. The grapes are of the black Hamburgh variety, and they are sent for the use of His Majesty as required. The fruit is said to be of better quality than is produced in any of the vineyards in the royal gardens. The various hospitals by order of the King.

It is a far cry to 1915, but arrangements are already well in hand for the great Imperial Exhibition which is to be held at Brompton. The date very probably has been carefully chosen, and 1915 will be one of the most memorable years in the century. In that year celebrations in connection with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the signing of Magna Charta. Smoking is becoming far more common among women in society. The habit is indulged in more openly than it used to be, and is now an unbecoming sight to see a woman motorist who is making calls putting away at a cigarette between visits, or a woman going doing the same thing. At many

ARE PREVENTING THE DEATH OF BABIES

Fort William Heads the Province in the Prevention of Infant Mortality

Ottawa, Sept. 11.—The report of deaths from cholera infantum during the months of June, July and August coming from Fort William demonstrates what an energetic M. H. O. and a staff of nurses are able to accomplish in preventing infant mortality. Fort William heads the province in this respect. For the last two years the number of breast-fed babies has largely increased, and it is to the efforts of Dr. Woodhouse, M. H. O. of Fort William, that the province owes its success. In August, 1910, 24 deaths were reported; in 1911, and two in 1912, while in August, 1912, 29 were the total, for the same month in 1911, and only three for the past month.

MANY CLAIMANTS SEEKING RAGPICKER'S GOLD

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 10.—Six hundred claimants began today in the probate court a legal struggle for the $44,000 estate left two years ago by Benjamin Ragpicker, an eccentric St. Louis character known as "The Millionaire Rag Picker," after the probate judge had rejected today what purported to have been a will in favor of an alleged son, Glen Adams Gilbert, of Galesburg, Illinois.

More than sixty of the claimants were in court. The first to be heard was Benjamin Foster Moynihan, of Ottawa, Ontario, who believes he is a son of the late rag picker. An attorney for Robert Moynihan, of Shannon county, Tennessee, put forth his claim as a brother of the deceased, and also presented the claims of twelve sons and daughters of Robert Moynihan's brother and sister. An attorney for Mrs. Ruth A. Cross of Oregon, Illinois, will support her claim that she is a daughter of Moynihan. The claimants are from all parts of the country, and the probate judge signified that night sessions of his court would probably be necessary to expedite the hearing.
