One Million Francs By Arnold Fredericks

"Ah, mademoiselle!" he remarked quiet-"Ah, mademoisele: he reliarized querily. "I see you have lost no time."

She staggered back in astonishment, clutching at the side of the door to support herself. "I came—" she began,

"But, Monsieur, 1—,"
"Read it," he repeated sternly. The girl hurriedly examined the note, then glanced swiftly toward the electric switch. Her astonishment seemed to increase momentarily; she stood looking at him, apparently uncertain as to what to do next. "Now go," he said shortly, and stood watching her as she went out into the hall.

CHAPTER VI.

Grace Ellicott, although at this time in her twentieth year, had lived a peculiarly retired and uneventful life. Her father had been a professor of languages in a small New England college, and here In a small New England college, and here she had grown up in an atmosphere of quiet and refinement until his death some two years before. Her mother had died when she was a small child, and her only near relatives were a brother who had joined the volunteer service and gone to the Philippines, and an aunt who after near relatives were a brother who had joined the volunteer service and gone to the Philippines, and an aunt, who, after being left a large fortune at the death of her first husband, had subsequently married the Count D'Este.

At her father's death all their small household effects had been sold, and the girl had gone for a time to live with distant relatives in Boston. A little later she was left even more alone in the world by the death of her brother from fever at Manila. It was about this time that her aunt, realizing the girl's lonely position, had sent for her to come to Paris and make her home there.

The first few months of her stay in the French capital had disclosed to the girl's youthful eyes a new and wonderful life, youthful eyes a short-lived. Withbut her happiness was short-lived. With-in a comparatively brief time her aunt was stricken with the slow and appar-ently incurable disease which ultimately ently incurable used. The Countess during her illness had frequently spoken of her wish to provide for the girl's future, but, being of an Harry Boss, Proprietors.

"I know the woman," said Duvall quietly. "She was in that Delatour case. I merely mentioned her real name to her." He turned to the Count and his face wore an expression of extreme gravity. "You are in great danger, Monsieur," he said earnestly. "Be on your guard." "Such a woman—in my house? Sacre bleu! I shall discharge her at once."

Duvall placed his hand upon D'Este's arm. "My dear Count, you will do nothing of the sort. Leave the woman to me. I will attend to her."

Duvall placed his hand upon D'Este's arm. "My dear Count, you will do nothing of the sort. Leave the woman to me. I will attend to her."

"But a thief—here—in my house?"

"He is right, my dear Count," said Lefevre. "The girl is now thoroughly frightened. She will not know what to do, and therefore she is certain to do the wrong thing. She can do no harm here. We shall have her well watched. Trust me for that."

"And now," said Duvall, "I should like to question Miss Ellicott."

D'Este went to the door. "Very well," he said, "I will bring her here." 'He was about to leave the room when the Prefect storned him. "I conceiled the door. "Monsieur Duvail will take charge of the case in my absence. You can safely depend upon him. Permit me to wish you good morning." He accompanied D'Este into the hall, followed by Emile.

"Make yourself quite comfortable, Monsieur Duvail," said the Count, pausing in the doorway. "Miss Ellicott will be here immediately."

"Thanks," said Duvail. "Of course I must see her alone."

"In my business, Count," abserved Duvail dryly, "the first lesson we learn is never to believe a woman."

Left alone, Duvail glanced carefully about the room, then went to the French window, and, leaning out, took a swift survey of the garden. Apparently satisfied with what he saw, he drew the window shut and stepped to the electric switch on the wall. With a quick movement he pressed the button and at once ment he pressed the switch on the wall. With a quick movement he pressed the button and at once all the lights in the room were turned on. They included not only the dome lamp over the resk, but several wall brackets situated about the sides of the apartment. Again he pressed a button and all the lights went out with the exception of the one over the desk. He repeated the operation a third time, and the light in the dome lamp went out. He uttered an exclamation, then apparently satisfied with the result of his investigations, proceeded to the desk, sat down, and, drawing a piece of notepaper toward him, began to write rapidly upon it.

He apparently had not observed Gabrielle, who, during his manipulation of the electric switch, had appeared in the doorway and stood watching him, an expression of mingled curiosity and fear showing in her face. For several moments she stood looking intently at him as he sat at the desk, his back toward her. When he came to her room to summon her engaged in packing her clothes into a sassed between them that morning, she felt that anything would be preferable to enduring a further stay under his roof. The Count expressed great surprise and annoyance at sight of her preparations. He urged her to reconsider the matter, to thim the result of his investigations, the urged her to reconsider the matter, to the matter, to the matter, and the family him, an expression of mingled curiosity and fear showing in her face. The Count had told her that a detective from the Prefecture wished to ask her a few questions. She could not understand wherein the matter of Victor Girard concerned her, but there seemed no good reason why she should refuse to see the detective and she realized that nesitatingly.

"To get this note I have written you," he said, rising and coming toward her. "Read it," he placed the place of paper in her hand: "you will find it both interesting and profitable."

Mrs. G.: Powder covers up but does not correct complexion faults. Use this simple lotion and your skin will assume its former youthful clearness and take on a charming tint: Dissolve 4 ounces spurmax in half pint witch hazel (or hot water), and pour in 2 teaspoonfuls glycerine. Using the spurmax lotion in place of powder overcomes the shiny, oily appearance and gives to a coarse, lifeless skin an exquisite fineness and healthy look. Even in hottest weather it is only necessary to apply the spurmax lotion once a day, because perspiration does not spot it, and then, too, it is invisible when on.

Modge W.: I never advise the electric needle for superfluous growths, because delatone paste does the work quicker, more thoroughly and is devoid of pain.

Mix some powdered delatone with water, Mkx some powdered delatone with water, then apply to objectionable hairs and after two or three minutes rub off, wash the skin and the hairs are gone. This the skin and the hairs are go leaves the skin smooth and firm.

V. M.: Soap was never intended for shampooing, because the "free" alkali trontains raises havoe with the scalp and hair roots. Use canthrox and you will find your dull, streaky, brittle hair will grow bright and even in color and be of a soft, silken texture. A teaspoonful canthrox dissolved in a cup hot water is ample for a delightful shampoo. This creates a, wealth of rich, penetrating lather that thoroughly rids the hair and scalp of dust, dandruff and excess oil; and after rinsing, the hair dries quickly and takes on its former rich color and Dorris: Greasy creams do more harm than good, because of their tendency to clog pores. This causes the skin to assume a leaden color and grow oily, and encourages blackheads, blotches and skin pimples. You will find this plain almozoin cream-jelly just the thing for complexion upsets and a permanent aid to real beauty: Stir two teaspoonfuls glycerine in half pint cold water, then add one ounce almozoin. When this is dissolved apply freely to face, neck and arms daily, and it will cleanse the skin of impurities, and give to it a charm and tint such as every healthy, well-groomed woman has. Use, this every morning and your skin will be free from freckles and the sun and mind will not tan it.

URGES REFORM IN SCHOOL CURRICULUM

Present Conditions Are Blamed For Increase in Predatory

Paris, July 31.-The question of morality, as it attaches itself to the public elementary school, is again arousing attention, together with the perennial subject of increased criminality. Certain provincial mayors have forbidden the exhibition of "bandit" their communes. pictures, they say, which display the exploits of "apaches" are encouraging and propagating crime.

In some quarters this view is challenged with the declaration that one

NURSE'S BODY FOUND; MURDER SUSPECTED

Following Identification, Police Fear That Miss Snodgrass Was Poisoned.

Catskill, N. Y., July 31.—The body of a girl found in Catskill Creek was identified today as that of Dorcas Ijams Snodgrass, a nurse, who disappeared July 17 after leaving the home of her sister, Mrs. John L. Crider, in the Chester Hill section of Mount Vernon, for a shopping tour in New York City.
Frank Kurtz, a Catskill undertaker.

found "Snodgrass" marked on the girl's clothing. Afterwards identification of the body was made by Frederick Schmidt, the young woman's flance, an electrical contractor of Mount Vernon, and by Police Lieutennt M. I. Silverton of the same place. How the body came to be in the ant M. creek, a tortuous stream, is a mystery. No marks of violence were found. One theory put forth was that the girl might have been drugged or poisoned, and thrown into the creek. There was no water in the lungs.

District Attorney Howard C. Wilbur decided to order an autopsy in the hope of clearing up the mystery as to the cause of death.

Coroner Branch was inclined to accept the possibility that Miss Snodgrass ended her life. Color was lent to this theory by the statement of Mount Vernon relatives of Miss Snodgrass that prior to her disappearance she suffered greatly from the heat. "bandit"
