

IN the starred duskness, pale and dreamy-eyed,
A woman breathed the incense—watched it glide
Out toward the desert; one hand on her breast,
Dove-like against the quivering whiteness, pressed
A silken case—within, a little bone
And piece of hammered brass. . . .

No more is known.

