REVIEW OF CANADA'S ECONOMY IN 1973 AND OUTLOOK FOR 1974

by the Honourable Alastair Gillespie, Minister of Industry. Trade and Commerce.

REVIEW OF 1973

Highlights in 1973 For the third year in succession, the Canadian economy in 1973 expanded at above its average longer-term growth-rate. The gross national product (GNP) increased about 14 per cent, to a total of approximately $117 billion, and in real terms output increased by close to 7 per cent. This expansion in real production was the highest for any year since the mid-Sixties, and was among the highest of the industrialized countries in the world.

> This growth reflected strength in the major sectors of the economy. Business spending on new plant and equipment picked up substantially after several years of comparatively modest increases. Housing starts reached a new record level. Consumer markets remained generally buoyant. Exports rose faster than they have at any time in the last two decades. This was accompanied by one of the largest gains of employment in recent years and a decline in the rate of unemployment.

> But a less encouraging aspect of 1973 was the increasing momentum of price-increases. While price-increases in Canada were somewhat less than in most other industrialized countries, they have exceeded recent experience in Canada. In part, inflation of costs and prices in 1973 reflected the scarcities of many industrial materials caused by rapid economic growth proceeding almost simultaneously in most of the major industrialized countries. addition, temporary world scarcity of feed grains and food products arose when crop failures in some major producing countries coincided with rising consumer demand. Major currency realignments during the year contributed to rising prices of imports into Canada. Particularly in the later months of the year, the costs of petroleum fuels rose as Arab states in the Middle East announced cutbacks in oil production and major increases in well-head prices. Higher prices for oil were in turn imposed by other major oilexporting countries.

Employment gains The sharp increases in economic activity were accompanied by one of the largest gains in employment for any year in Canada's recent
