

Defence Production Act

knowing the susceptibilities of the leader of the opposition, I would not think of trying it.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Chairman, section 28 does just precisely that, and the explanation of the Minister of Justice completely overlooked the fact that we have just been discussing the section under which any other statute can be set aside where it affects defence contracts.

Mr. Garson: May I make one observation concerning my hon. friend's remark. I do not think that, even within the limited meaning he was giving to his remarks, that is confining them to section 28, it affords the interpretation he has given. Section 28, I would point out, relates entirely to defence contracts, whereas the Emergency Powers Act established a wider application.

Section stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fournier (Hull): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is private members' day and we will follow the order set out in standing order 15.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
