

The first of the year 1700 was a year of great calamity to the Kingdom of England. In the month of January the King was taken with a violent cold, which continued till the 29th of the same month, when he expired. His Majesty was buried in the Chapel of St. James's Palace, on the 30th of January, and the next day the Queen was crowned at Westminster. The coronation was performed with great solemnity, and the King's body was laid in state in the Chapel of St. James's Palace, where it remained till the 1st of February, when it was interred in the Chapel of St. James's Palace. The funeral was performed on the 4th of February, and the King's body was interred in the Chapel of St. James's Palace. The funeral was performed with great solemnity, and the King's body was interred in the Chapel of St. James's Palace. The funeral was performed with great solemnity, and the King's body was interred in the Chapel of St. James's Palace.