

document reaches outside of our own limits and of our own graduate support, it should be taken to be an appeal on behalf of medical science in its widest sense.

I am sending a copy to Chipman as he is closely concerned with what I have written. Indeed the paragraph in regard to radium comes at his suggestion.

I would like you to understand that I would prefer just now to accept your advice and guidance. It is naturally a little hard for me at present to know how far to go and to know what is possible and what is not. I don't want to make a shout and a scream if it will serve no purpose.

Very sincerely,

Stephen Leacock
