were fent on board her, that in a voyage to the States, their recovery, might be perfected.—These men deserted from the Chichester, and, with their British uniforms on, entered into the American Service.—They were seen on shore after they had entered, by the Serjeant of Marines of the Chichester, and one, of them had the impudence to offer to shake hands with him, but he rejected his offer with becoming contempt.

Those men were applied for by Capt. Douglas, the Commanding of the Squadron in the Chesapeake, and the answer he received was, if any such men had enlisted, they were gone up the country with a detachment.

Did the gentlemanly conduct of Captain Stopford, deserve such a return as this?—Will Mr. Jefferson pretend that such treatment did not furnish just cause of offence and provocation?—If he can reconcile to base a transaction to modern maxims of philosophy, we ought to be thankful that the plain common sense of the country we inhabit, is not yet so perverted, and that the terms right and wrong, kindness and unkindness, still retain their proper and appropriate meanings.

We will now notice the cafe of the Halifax :- A midshipman and five men are fent from that Ship to weigh the kedge anchor .- Those men suddenly take possession of the boat, seize upon their officer, whom they threaten to kill, and reach the American shore-Though the circumstances attending their desertion are peculiarly aggravating, vet they are no sooner landed, than they are enlitted by the American recruiting officer, Lieut. Sinclair ;- Lord Townshend comes on shore, fees his men parading the freets of Norfolk, with the American flagimakes application to the authority there, through the British Conful, for the delivery of them, without effect .- One of the men would willingly have returned with him, had he not been prevented by the unfortunate man, who on Monday last suffered for his crime. - He finally applies to Lieutenant Sinclair, and offers, if permitted to go into the rendezvous, to point out the men, but obtgins no fatisfaction, and receives the evalive, prevaricating answer, that he knew of no men who had entered, of the names his Lordship mentioned, in the name had

The American sloop of war, Wasp, which sailed the beginning of June, with the President's objections to the pending Freaty, as an additional proof of friendly intention, catrice with her three British Deferters.

A number of men Deserted from the respective Ships named in the Admiral's Order, and in no instance have they been given up in consequence of the applications made for them, but have been encouraged and harbored in their Desertion, and the most of them entered into the American Naval Service.
