Market opened dull this morning and continued professional all day. There was an early dip, due to selling by bearish pit traders and scattered commission houses. Bullishness of the coarse grains caused prices in the wheat pit to raily slightly later in the session, but on every bulge selling pressure was exerted. Cables were 1/3c to 1/3c lower. The general snows in the winter wheat belt assure protection to that crop. This fact and the news of milder temperature in the southwest offset the Receipts of farm produce were 1800 bush-of grain, 60 leads of lyly, 2 loads of taw, with several loads of dressed hogs. that crop. This fact and the news of milder temperature in the southwest offset the bullishness of light northwest receipts. Northwest markets are firm. There is some inquiry from the east for red winter, but no cars to ship in case it is sold. Expect to see continuance of this scalping market with a tendency towards easiness.

Ennis & Stoppani wired to J. L. Mitchell at the close of the market:

Wheat—Without any special feature or news of importance, wheat was inclined downward during most of the morning, realizing just before the close on reports of large sales of cash wheat in all the southwestern markets. St. Louis reported the sale of a good line of No. 2 red winter for shipment south, which gave local holders renewed courage and induced some fresh buying around the low point. However, the day's proceedings were lindedistive and unsatisfactory in that nothing developed to induce much activity. It would seem, however, in case new factors of a bullishness nature do not appear shorily that prices must take a sudden and lossibly a severe drop. The market closed a shock higher than yesterday, but without corn and Oats—Were strong and received especially good general strong and received oc.

Corn and Oats Were strong and received especially good support from influential in-terests. As we have maintained for some time, the situation in coarse grains is dia-metrically opposed to that which obtains in wheat, the former being on a basis of supply and demand and the latter in excess of the supply.

The chief justice declined, and Martin thereupon rose from the bench, saying if the usual courtesy was refused he must retire. He did so, the chief justice intimating that no interests could suffer by his so doing.
