FIGHT FOR LIFE IN BREAKERS

A Three-Master Goes to Pieces on the Rocks in Zero Temperature.

Digby, N. S., Dec. 5.—Death from the icy cold on the western coast of Nova Scotia came to Capt. Berry after his vessel, the three-masted schooner Emma R. Harvey, had gone to pieces, and he and all but one of his crew had forced their way through the breakers to land. One seaman was drowned and Capt. Berry fell exhausted after reaching shore, and was frozen to death. The others of the crew found shelter.

Almost at the same time, and only eight miles away, the crew of the threemasted schooner Rebecca W. Huddell were passing through a terrible experience, but they saved their vessel by beaching her. second mate of the Huddell was severely frost-bitten and the captain and crew were exhausted by exposure.

MONTREAL.

Montrea. Dec. 5. The Emma R. Harvey, an American schooner, whose home port is Bucksport, Me., sailed from Applesland, N. S., bound for New York with a cargo of lumber. Coming down the western coast of Nova Scotia, she had a constant fight against wind and wave, and last night she encountered a terrific gale. Driven before the northwester, with the temperature hovering about the zero mark, the Harvey reached a point just off Sloan's Cove, eight miles east of Digby Cut. She was close inshore, and Capt. Berry and his men struggled frantically to keep his vessel off, but a tremendous gust of wind hurled the schooner on the rocks. Planks fell apart, masts went by the board, and every man on board was thrown into the water. It was a flerce fight for life in the breakers, and all but one succeeded in reaching land. The captain came ashore, but fell on the beach some distance away and within a short time was frozen to death. The missing man was a seaman, who undoubtedly was drowned.
