

The Minister of Education was interviewed on the desirability of having married women's names (ratepayers in their own right) placed on the voters list, as trouble had arisen in some cases where the Ladies were refused the ballot, he promised to look into the matter before the next issue of the lists were printed.

Several deputations, headed by the President, were actively engaged on different occasions in interviewing members of the Legislature on matters relating to the interests of women.

Finding our City Council had refused to carry out our desire to add pages to the voters lists for women voters, Hon. G. W. Ross promised the deputation that he would have the matter made compulsory by law as far as cities were concerned.

Many of the prominent members of the House were also approached by our committee urging the support of Mr. Balfour's Bill to admit women to the profession of law. The petition was carried on amendment, by permitting women to be solicitors and not barristers.
