

those branches of Mental Philosophy, which had not been overtaken during the previous year, and on Moral Philosophy: Reid's works being used as a text book in Mental Philosophy, and Wayland's Treatise on Ethics as a text book in that department. In the Junior Philosophy class, a course of instruction was delivered in Logic, and the elements of Mental Philosophy, including a full description of the various theories of Perception; the text books used being Whately's logic, and Reid's Lectures, with the notes of Sir. W. Hamilton. In both the Philosophical classes, the students were required, independently of the lectures delivered by the Professor, to study the text books, and to submit to examinations upon them. In both classes likewise, Essays were from time written by all the students, on subjects prescribed by the Professor. In the Exegetical class, a critical discourse, (commonly called Exercise and Addition,) was delivered by each of the students in the 2nd year of their Theological course, except in one or two instances where the delivery of this exercise was postponed for a year.

The conduct of the students in all the classes was distinguished by invariable propriety.

GEORGE P. YOUNG.

LIST OF STUDENTS 1857-8.

PREPARATORY CLASSES.

1.	2.	3.
John Morrison. Marshal Macklin. William Lundy. Olivier Labelle. Olivier Paquette.	John Davidson. James Wallace. Lachlan Cameron. Stephen Young. John K. Hislop. Ebenezer Bald. James McGregor. Hector McNeil. John Thompson. Kenneth McLennan. David Duff.	Edward Graham. Thomas Kellough. John Eadie.

THEOLOGICAL CLASS.

1.	2.	3.
Walter Coulthard. Alexander Matheson. Finlay McCuaig. N. McKinnon. Robert Kennedy. D. H. Fletcher.	Wm. Millican. Alexander Fraser. Arch'd. Stewart. James Greenfield. Robert Leask. George Crow. Wm. Matheson. James Campbell. Alex. Mackay. John McEwan. Charles Cameron. J. Robertson. D. McVicar. Peter McDiarmid.	Thomas Fenwick. A. D. McDonald. D. McLean. Arch'd. McDiarmid. Adam F. MacQueen.