CANNOT RECALL HIS NAME.

Man in Chicago Has "H. T. A." on Watch. Given at Seneca, N. Y. Chicago, July 25.—A well-dressed, intelligent-looking man walked into a police station here and asked the authorities to find his name for him. "I have been trying for two days to find out who I am, but I can't do it. Can you help me?" he asked. Investigation revealed that his watch was engraved with the initials "H. T. A.", his watchfob was a war service medal given him in Seneca, N. Y.; his coat and tie had trade marks of firms in Buffalo and New York and in his pockets were several Buffalo street car fare tokens.

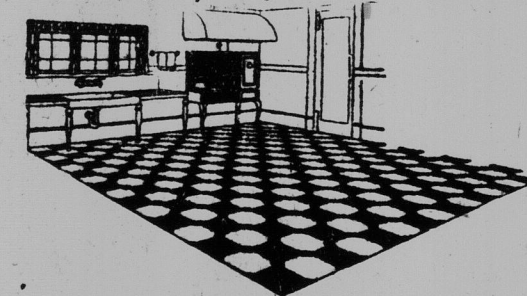

Sparta Excavations Alter Accepted Ideas

Military Period Began in Sixth Century B. C. Instead of Earlier Time.

New York, July 25.—The British School at Athens, which was obliged to suspend excavations in Sparta during the World War, is preparing to resume them under the direction of Professor R. C. Bosanquet and Professor H. M. Dawkins. The most important discoveries so far have been the temples of Artemis and Orthia and the Chalkioikos, together with pieces of sculpture—marble, terracotta, ivory—and inscriptions, which have served to fix disputed dates and confirm various events in Spartan history.

Thus the earliest settlement, called Menelaion, because Menelaus was venerated there, was fixed on the left bank of the Eurotas. The date of the arrival of the Dorians at the beginning of the age of iron also was approximately determined. The Dorians founded the two temples mentioned, and the earliest Dorian stratum yielded a wealth of amber ornaments similar to that found at Hallstadt, proving that the Spartans came from the north. In the next stratum were unmistakable signs of foreign influence, such as the shell-fish used by the Phoenicians in their dyes and brought by Ionian sailors to Sparta. To a stratum nearer the surface belong the relics of distinctive Spartan art. An ivory relief representing a galley setting out to sea was uncovered, supposed to portray the abduction of Helen by Paris. From the inscriptions, written in a crude dialect, it was learned that the legend Lycurgus founded his famous system for personal and social conduct within two centuries of the settlement of the Dorians was a delusion, and that the great military period had its inception in the sixth century B. C. and not earlier. According to the deduc-

A Chance For a Real Saving on Linoleum Remnants

At the end of every Spring rush in our Linoleum Department we find an accumulation of odd lengths which have to be sold at a sacrifice to effect a speedy clearance.

Most of the Remnants are balances or ends of four yard wide goods, and are therefore all twelve feet long. There is a large number of these ranging anywhere from three feet to twelve feet, in a wide range of patterns. Some cases of two pieces same design. You could cover a large room very cheaply.

EVERY PIECE A REAL BARGAIN. NO APPROVAL OR RESERVE.

Note—We cannot send and get measures for Remnants. Kindly bring your own sizes.

tions made by the Hellenic scholar, Professor Percy Gardner:

"It was only by degrees that the keen desire of military domination mastered the Spartans—but it did so finally to such an extent that poetry and art, and all the humanities of life, were banished; and the Spartans became a man of few words and no accomplishments, accustomed to the hardest of lives and the coarsest of food, only redeeming the harshness of his nature by the cultivation of certain virtues in which he excelled all mankind, and in regard to which he has given to all times a noble ideal. We still speak of Spartan courage, Spartan frugality and simplicity, Spartan self-devotion to the State."

Other scholars deduce from the relics that poetry and dancing were preserved throughout the military age both as an inspiration and an element of military exercise.
