When Money is Tight Practically all classes of investments, bonds, stocks, debentures, real estate, depreciate in value to a ruinous extent. Investors are often forced into bankruptcy at such times through conditions over which they have no control. But an Imperial Life policy never depreciates. On the contrary, it continues to increase in value from the day it is issued until its maturity, no matter what financial conditions may be. And, if necessary, a loan can always be obtained from the Company, upon the sole security of an Imperial policy, any time after it has been three years in force-and that, without publicity and without delay. The annually increasing amounts of loan available and the moderate rate of interest chargeable are definitely If you would like to know more about the merits of this "panic proof" investment ask for our booklet "A Few Facts."
