An aged man, by sorrow bowed, Looked on the sky without a cloud, And hailed, as from his couch he rose, Another day of pure repose.

The echoes of the Sabbath bell Upon his chastened spirit fell.

He trod, with low and reverent air, The consecrated aisles of prayer: And felt a glory from above Decending as a Heavenly Dove.

As sitting at his Master's feet; For foretastes wonderful were given Of the Sabbatic rest of Heaven . And his heart cried, "Dear Lord, how long Fre I shall sing the conqueror's song?

The wish had but escaped his breast, When visions of his longed-for rest Came to him, with o'erpowering might, And thrilled him with excess of light,

He felt the mortal man give way, The spirit loosened from its clay; And cried again, "Dear Lord, is this The entrance into perfect bliss?" And, as the pearly gates swung wide, "NEAR TO THE PORT" he breathed, and died.

NEAR TO THE PORT! O marines Thy message does my spirit stir; And my heart cries, "Dear Lord, how long Ere I may sing the conqueror's song? Ere my worn feet shall surely press The temples of thy holiness? Ere the day breaks, and from above On me descends the Heavenly Dove? Ere the rough voyage of life be past,
