

MEMORY.—In memory's mellowed light we behold not the thorns, we see only the beautiful flowers.

Books.—It is vanity to persuade the world one hath much learning when one has got a great library. As soon would one believe every man is valiant that has a well-furnished armoury. I guess good housekeeping by the smoking, not by the funnels, as knowing that many of them are without chimneys, and more without fires. Some books are merely to be tasted of, viz.: first, voluminous books, the task of a man's life to read over; second, auxiliary books, only to be repaired to on occasion; third, such as are mere pieces of formality, so that if you look on them, you look through them, and he that peeps through the casement of the index, sees as much as if he were in the house; but others, read and digest carefully; do not merely trade on their tables and contents.
