Moths, Butterflies, and Beetles Often Make Long Distance Journeys

William Evans, a Scottish naturalist, who has made a lifelong study of the fauna of Scotland, obtained from a dozen Scottish lighthouses 241 species of insects, which include two butterflies, 159 moths, 188 caddis flies and lacewings, 40 diptera, 10 beetles and a dozen other species Most of the specimens were males. To reach the Isle of May, in the Firth of Forth, where Mr. Evans collected most of his insects, many of the specimens must have flown across several miles of sea.

In his records Mr. Evans calls at ention to several other extraordin ary flights of insects. Thus, the "painted lady," or this butterfly (Pyrameis cardui), has been known to cross the Alps; the red admiral butterfly (Vanessa ata-lanta) has landed in numbers on the deck of a vessel 1,500 miles from the coast of England: the common white butterflies cross the English chan-nel in clouds; the famous milkweed butterfly (Danais archippus), abundant everywhere in the United States, is said to make a 200-mile journey from California to the Hawailian islands and has gradually progressed by way of the south sea islands as far as Australia.
