A Remarkable Answer.

By RUTH CAMERON.

Said the man whom to-day's chat is about, "Well, you see, I don't really know anything about the European nations."

He said He Didn't Know.

Instead of answering with some vague, half-remembered generality that he had heard or read, some perfectly valueless ungrounded statement, as so many people would have done, he took the simple method of answering that seems to occur to so few, and acknowledged his ignorance.

In other words, having nothing to say, he said nothing. And because his answer struck me with such force, I realized how rare that sort of answer is.

We Forget What Words Are For.

Words were originally wrested out of dumbness by man to express facts and ideas. Then gradually he became so facile with words that he came to be fond of words and of talk for themselves alone and quite apart from any facts or ideas they expressed. And thus the habit of talking without saying anything came into existence.

When one thinks how much of the talk that goes on everywhere, is nothing but an exchange of these vague general statements, these half-remembered facts, these perfectly valueless guesses, one wonders how in such a busy world so full of duties and pleasures, anyone has the time for something that is neither.

If we all stopped talking when we had nothing to say, one of several desirable things would happen. Either someone who did have something to say would speak; or the subject would be changed, and we would talk of something else; or the talk would cease altogether, and we would go and read a book or do something else worthwhile.

You Don't Need To Teach Him.

You remember that old proverb, "He who knows not and knows not that he knows not is a fool, shun him; he who knows not and knows that he knows not is simple, teach him; he who knows and knows not that he knows is asleep, wake him; he who knows and knows that he knows is wise, follow him." I have always liked that, but I have decided that it needs an emendation: "He who knows not and knows that he knows not" is far from simple—on the contrary, he is of the wise of the earth. And as for teaching him, no one needs to, he will learn for himself. You couldn't stop him.

HOPE.

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast;" no grief or ill can knock it gaily west. We hear of men so soaked in black despair they see no hope, no solace anywhere for if this were so they would not last a day; they'd gasp three times and quickly "a d e away. While man survives, however fierce, he sees himself once for all.

Some spark of hope is glowing bright and hot. When it winks out, he shuts his weary eyes, and goes somewhere—perhaps to Paradise—where no doubt that even Wilhelm hopes, as in the gloom all desolate he gropes. In waking dreams, when evening breezes man, he sees himself once for all on a throne; cold reason chides him when the morning breaks, and grimly tells him that his dreams are fakes; cold reason is a pregnant sort of hope, but it falls down when it collides with hope. When hope is dead in Wilhelm's tortured soul he'll tread the dunes to find a seemingly hole, where an ex-king in solitude may lie, and like a lion or a jackal die. We live on hope, as well as pie or bread; hope is the morrow, yesterday is dead.

FOOT-ILLS OF WOMEN.

Women have more foot ills than men, and it is believed that the chief reason is that woman's shoes are more injurious to the feet than the common flat shoe men wear.

There is no excuse for anyone wearing shoes that do not fit, for an attempt to enhance the beauty of the foot by wearing a shoe that is too small reveals it in an unnatural and ungainly walk, besides creating ills of the feet that are often difficult to overcome.

The shoe should fit snug enough to hold the foot in shape. If too loose it allows the bones to spread, causing a misshapen foot and a tired feeling generally.

While patent or varnished leather fashion many of our smartest shoes, it is not advisable to wear them in the hot weather if the feet are tender.

powders and lotions that may be secured to relieve burning and tender feet, but in case they are not obtainable, one may gain temporary relief by soaking the feet night and morning in hot water for from five to ten minutes. An ounce of pure cider vinegar added to each gallon of water used will add to the efficiency in most cases.

Cold, clammy feet are usually due to improper circulation. This may be only local and due to too small a shoe or too tightly laced shoes.

His Example.

There are little eyes upon you, and they're watching night and day; There are little ears that quickly take in every word you say; There are little hands all eager to do everything you do, And a little boy that's dreaming of the day he'll be like you.

You're the little fellow's idol, you're the wisest of the wise; In his little mind about you no suspicions ever rise; He believes in you devoutly, holds that all you say and do, He will say and do in your way when he's grown up just like you.

Oh, it sometimes makes me shudder when I hear my boy repeat Some careless phrase I've uttered in the language of the street; And it sets my heart to grieving when some little fault I see, And I know beyond all doubting that he picked it up from me.

There's a wide-eyed little fellow who believes you're always right, And his ears are always open and he watches day and night. You are setting an example every day in all you do, For the little boy who's waiting to grow up to be like you.

"Mitteleuropa."

(From the New York Times.) French troops have entered Budapest, the Hungarian capital, which will be occupied pending peace arrangements. It is not far from Budapest to Vienna, the capital of what formerly was the empire of Austria-Hungary. How completely dispelled are those dreams of "Mitteleuropa!"

A Review of Their Work.

L. C. MORRIS.

ARTICLE II.

Mr. Hutchinson was an entirely different type of man from his companion. In physique he was tall, stately, and well proportioned. His hair was flaxen, and his voice mellow, but distinct withal. It is said that no two persons are really alike; but I have met three who bore such a close resemblance to each other that they could easily have been taken for the same individual. In the person of Evangelist Hutchinson, next in that of Mr. Stewart Cumberland, the celebrated thought reader, who came here shortly after, and in the person of our own able and impartial citizen, Mr. Morine, we have a case of three gentlemen, of marked individual resemblance. To have seen one was to have seen the three. To have heard one was to have heard all. Such men as these were born to be heard, and they have been heard.

In age the Evangelists were about twenty-six, and were both unmarried. They were each occupied different work at Halifax, but by mutual arrangement it was agreed that they stop off at St. John's, and when they continued their journey to Nova Scotia. They arrived here by one of the Allan boats, probably the Caspian, from the feeling that the night and morning in hot water for from five to ten minutes. This gave an opening for Admiral Sims, who capped it by saying that an Englishman entered a drawing-room as if it were his own, while an American entered it as if he did not care to whom it belonged. The Admiral also told a story to illustrate the pomposity of naval officers of high rank. A naval chaplain was once commencing service in the chapel, when the Admiral was a little late. "The Lord is in His Holy Temple; let all the earth keep silent before Him," said the chaplain.

ARTISTIC TEMPERAMENT.

Many years ago we held the first of that artistic temperament in which was an admirable trait, and for years at a time we would search through our Bibles and arithmetics, trying to acquire it for ourselves. Disappointment awaited us at every hand, and it seemed as if artistic temperament was trying its hardest to avoid us. Finally, with determination, we decided to go to a movie show and see what an art exhibition was. When we did examine a work of art, we suffered from an up-hill fight, and it seemed as if a man with artistic temperament would not be able to stand on and ever on. Disappointment came when we arrived at the artist's studio. A man with artistic temperament! Heart-broken and weary unto death, we crept home and laid down to die. For months the doctors fought an up-hill fight, and it was years before we had fully recovered, completely cured.—C. E.

JUSTIFIABLE PROCRASTINATING.

Would that all of us might learn to put off till to-morrow the desire to do what we have been procrastinating or postponing. There are some things which can always wait; vengeance is one of them.

In the pathway of life the roses are beyond the thorns.

THE DECOY.

A man whose house adjoined a way track—a side line on which were never driven a man or a goat—kept a goat tethered in a garden. A friend asked him one day what was the use of the goat. "The goat," he replied, "keeps me in coils. Never a trespasser but the freeman throws a coil at it!"

A DEFINITION.

A spendthrift is a person who spends money for a rainy day, and prays for rain.

CHROMATIC AID FOR THE POLICE.

The police authorities of Chicago have instituted a system under which one of the criminals in custody must walk before a motion-picture camera that records his character and attitudes before he is released. All the pictures are then reproduced and shown to the detectives and police.
