TO-DAY

SIDE TALKS.

By Ruth Cameron.

THE TROUBLE WITH ENTERTAINING.

"Is that people will not do things as simply as they used to do. They want to have everything so much more elaborate, they want to put on so much front that they wear themselves out and don't get any fun out of the entertaining. It isn't so much the fault of the automobile that hospitality has become a problem and a burden to some people as it is the fault of the way we live nowadays." There is a great deal of truth in that, isn't there?

We could have a lot more fun out of visiting, and being visited, if we didn't try so hard to put up a front, as she says.

When the Bills Come In.

We could entertain more freely without worrying about the expense

If we simply shared what we had instead of buying what we cannot afford and then being staggered when the bills come in.

A friend of mine had to sail very close to the wind during the peak of high prices as her husband was one of those many men in small executive positions who had no raises commensurate with the rise in cost of living (when the wages of any large class are forcibly raised beyond the level of their economic value it has to come out of someone else.)

One day she told me that she had thought she would have to resign from the little neighborhood club of six couples who dined at each other's homes every two weeks. "If they would be willing," she explained to each have a dinner such as they would naturally have, things would balance up. But they aren't willing to do that. They all insist on giving a costly dinner when it comes their turn. And yet some of them can't afford it any better than I."

Why It Costs So Much.

It is the same way with week-end and longer visits. If we would simply take turns sharing our homes, the extra expense would be cancelled by a diminution in expense at some other time. But this is what happens. It is customary when people visit now-days to carry a gift, candy or fruit or perhaps something for the house. When you return the visit, you do the same thing. Naturally that adds considerably to the cost. Then you feel obliged to have a much better table than usual and when you return the visit your host does the same thing. Furthermore, you must take your guest to any and all entertainments which your neighborhood affords and when you return your visit your host must do likewise. When you come to total it all up an exchange of visits has cost you both a goodly increase in your expenses.

An Artificial Life.

And the same thing is true of time and effort as is true of money. Instead of allowing them to share your life while they are with you and doing the same while you are with them you each try to live an artificial life for the time being and consequently find the visit a tax, are tired when it is over and tell yourself you must cut down on entertaining. In the old days people made much longer visits than they do to-day. But the way they managed it was by making their guests part of the family. To be sure they gave the guest the best they had, brought out by hand, preserved, killed the chicken, gave him the most comfortable chair and the top of the cream, but they didn't try to live on an entirely different scale while he was with them.

Not What He Meant.

The good-looking new curate wanted to make a good impression, as it was his first sermon. He was determined not to neglect his personal appearance.

Smoothing his hair, he said to the old vergor: "Could you get me a glass? A small one will do."

The vergor hurried away, but soon returned, concealing something under his coat.

"I know what nervousness is, sir," he said. "I've brought you a whole bottle."

U. S. Forest Revenue.

Revenue amounting to $5,063,527 was paid into the treasury from the national forests during the fiscal year 1922, according to the annual report of the forest service. Nearly $4,500,000 in receipts were derived from the use of timber and forage. The remainder were for use of land, including waterpower sites. Receipts for the last quarter were far in excess of those for any previous quarter in the administration of the national forests, except in 1920. It was reported.

Income-producing business in the national forests showed remarkable stability, the report continued, in view of the depressed or uncertain conditions in the timber and livestock industries of the West, which afford the principal markets for national forest products. The abnormally low output of western sawmills, which caused a decrease in receipts from timber sales for the preceding year, continued until the last quarter of the fiscal year 1922, but for the quarter they exceeded $620,000, and for the entire year totalled $1,783,347, almost identical with those of 1921.

Approximately 22 per cent. of the cattle and 53 per cent. of the sheep in eleven western states are grazed upon national forest ranges during a part or all of the year. Of national forest receipts, 25 per cent. are given to the counties in which they lie, to be used for schools.

How Gold is Beaten Out.

The beating of the innumerable little square pieces of gold which are used to cover domes and signs and so on, forms a distinct industry in the gold trade, which employs a large amount of skill.

The building in which the work is carried on is filled throughout the day with the sound of hammers. On every side little boxes containing tiny rolls of gold are to be seen, which, although measuring an inch and a half in length, are each worth about $10. The gold is received in bars one eighth of an inch in thickness, an inch in width, and weighing 240 pennyweights. This is rolled out into a ribbon thirty yards in length. It is then given out to the workmen in strips measuring seven yards, each of which is cut up into 180 pieces. These are now ready to be beaten out by hand. They are placed (protected by fine skins) in a tool known as the "clutch," and are thoroughly pounded out on a great granite block set in the ground in such a way that there is absolutely no vibratory movement. The process is repeated several times, the gold as it spreads being continuously subdivided until it is of the exact dimensions required.

THE H. G. WELLS FAN.

I'm reading all that Wells is writing, his volumes full of sense and snap, his books descriptive of the fighting that wiped the Kaiser off the map; his history, whose scope surprises all men who would world annals know; his tales, in which he analyzes the souls of John and Richard Roe. His tracks, in which new creeds are fashioned, and old ones to the dump are tossed, his essays, soaring and impassioned—I read them all, and hang the cost. And thus my golden hours are taken, I have no time for honest toil; my aunts must scrub to earn the bacon, my grandma tills the fertile soil. The pastor says he's sorely smitten because I go to church no more; but books by Wells have just been written, and I must get them at the store. The statesmen seek me at my hovel, to ask me why I do not vote; they find me with a new Wells novel, that strikes a high and ringing note. The grocer comes, his pencil whitening, and counts up sums he says are due; he sees me sitting up with Britling, and Mr. Britling sees it through. If one would go where Wells is leading, he has no time for other things: the long, long hours he spends in reading, until the village curfew rings. If Wells would take a brief vacation, I might get something useful done, regain my long lost reputation for industry and triumphs won.

Finger And Toe.

That destructive disease, finger and toe, is practically unknown on land naturally containing a high percentage of lime, and for that reason the artificial application of burned lime has long been practised as a preventive, and it certainly is the most effective agent known. In applying lime immediately after a turnip crop has been grown one should mark where the disease, if any, had been most destructive, and increase the dressing accordingly. The usual custom is to apply two to four tons per acre, the dressing being given in the autumn either six months or eighteen months before a turnip crop is to be grown, and just prior to ploughing the land. On the whole the better of the two systems would appear to be that of applying the lime eighteen months ahead of the turnip crop. Although the virulence of the disease can be minimised by the use of lime there is no doubt that to get rid of it completely, careful attention also be paid to other matters. Working the land while it is in condition is often a fruitful posing cause of an outbreak of soil that is sored by want of drainage, or in consequence of a drawing receipt of the disease. Neglect of keeping the ground of charcoal and similar waste contribute to the spread of trouble, for such plants are as well as cultivated plants.

France Has Copious Supply of Wine

PARIS.—The amount of wine produced in France in 1922 was that of 1921 by more than 20 per cent, according to the official published recently. The 1922 crop produced 1,513,500,000 gallons of wine as compared with 990,000,000 in 1921. In addition to the French wine, Algeria produced during the season, 163,000,000 gallons of wine and taking into consideration 44,000,000 gallons of wine from 1921, it is evident that never else France may be short of wine. It is anticipated that many dealers that a cut in the price of wine will be necessary to dispose of the surplus stocks.
