DISCUSSING CANADA

The New York Sun Gets It Down

Fine. New York, April 11, 1892.—The following editorial article in the New York Sun, which has recently been discussing Canadian affairs to a considerable extent, has caused some comment. It may interest Canadians to read what is being said about them by confit the leading invasible of New York.

one of the leading journals of New York. The following is the article: THE CANADIANS WOULD BE WELCOME. THE CANADIANS WOULD BE WELCOME.
It appears from a leader entitled "Annexation Nonsense," lately published in the Montreal Herald, that the Canadian Tories have hit upon a new plan of checking the growth of sentiment in favor of a political tusion of the Dominion with the United States. The writer of the article says that Canadians may yout themselves in the Canadians may vote themselves in the Union if they like, but that the Union will Union if they like, but that the Union will not admit them for the following reasons: First, it is alleged that we should not care to complicate our politics by incorporating a lot of States whose vote would be an unknown factor at elections. This is manifest, according to the Herald, from the length of time which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the which some of our own the length of the le territories have had to wait before secur-ing full State rights. Then, again, it is as-serted that we should never consent to as-sume the public debt of the Dominion, much less the Provincial and municipal debts under which the Canadians now bor. We consider ourselves better qualified to express an opinion on this subject than is the Montreal Herald, and we assure our is the Montreal Herald, and we assure our Canadian friends that, whenever they are ready to join us, they will be promptly admitted to the Union upon terms equal, just, and generous. Each Province of the Dominion will continue to exercise the large measure of local independence which under our system belongs to the States, and which includes all powers not expressly delegated to the Federal Government. Each Province will, indeed, acquire more autonomy than it now possesses, for in-Each Province will, indeed, acquire more autonomy than it now possesses, for instead of a Lieutenant-Governor appointed by the Dominion Governor-General, himself the appointee of a distant sovereign, it will have at the head of its State Administration a Governor elected by the people. It will have, in fact, the power of molding for itself through a State constitution just such a form of local government as it may prefer, subject only to the definite preserving. such a form of local government as it may prefer, subject only to the definite prescriptions of our federal organic law. No intelligent person can compare in detail the mixed scheme of tederal and local government which now obtains in Canada with the state of things existing on this side of the border, and not recognize that every Canadian Province would enjoy more local independence within the Union than it has outside of it.

But we are told that American politicians But we are told that American politicians would object to annexation because they cannot foresee with certainty how the Canadians would vote. If on such a pretext any of our politicians tried to frustrate the union of the Anglo-Saxon race upon this continent, he would be swiftly relegated by the people to private life. There is no longer any sectional convex. relegated by the people to private life. There is no longer any sectional apprehension in this country with regard to the admission of Canada, as there was when Lord Elgin negotiated his reciprocity treaty, at which time the Southern slaveholders feared a disturbance of the political equilibrium from the addition of a number of free States. At present the interest of no class or section could conceivably be threatened by the acquisition of Canada As to the alleged uncertainty regarding the party affiliations which the Canadians might form, that is a point in dians might form, that is a point in their favor. The uncertainty indicates that dians might form, that is a point in their favor. The uncertainty indicates that their votes would be pretty evenly divided between our two political parties. There is, indeed, reason to believe that the Province of Quebec, transformed into a State of the Union, would become one of the bulwarks of the Democratic party, but it is equally probable that British Columbia would evince a political sympathy with Oregon, the Canadian Northwest with Dakota, Minnesota and Wisconsin, and the Canadian seaboard Provinces with our own Northeastern States. Finally, the great Province of Ontario, once admitted to the Union, would, like the neighboring State of New York, become an arena in which Democrats and Republicans might contend on almost equal terms. In short, neither of our political parties has anything to lose by the effacement of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and it either of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and it either of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and it either of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and it either of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and it either of them are the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary between ourselves and our Canadian kinspans and the summer of the artificial boundary and the su ween ourselves and our Canadian kin en; and if either of them ventured to ose such a triumph of right feeling and ood sense, it would be repudiated at the Nothing could be more preposterous than to suppose that because we have made some of our Territories wait some time be-fore we have bestowed on them the full rights of Statehoot, we should deal in the same way with Canada. The inhabitants of our Tertitories are the subjects of our Federal Government, possessing only such rights as it sees fit to give them. The Canadians, on the other hand, are freemen, cur full political equals before as well as after annexation, and we should well understand that, if they offered to enter the Union, it would be a question of now or never, and that the opportunity once missed might never again present itself. We should treat them with as much deference and liberality as we treated Texas, which, it will be remembered, had been un independent republic for eight years before it was admitted to the Union. To Texas we made some extraordinary concessions, including ood, we should deal in the admitted to the Union. To Texas we made some extraordinary concessions, including the right to divide itself at its own discretion into five States, and to acquire a corresponding representation in the United States Senate. The privilege has never been exercised, and we mention it only to show how differently we comport ourselves with regard to the admission of an independent commonwealth on the one hand, and with reference to the admission of one of our own Territories on the other.

pendent commonwealth on the one hand, and with reference to the admission of one of our own Territories on the other.

That the public debt of the Dominion Government would be assumed be this country and incorporated with the national debt of the United States is a matter of curse. Why not? Would not the Canadians, transformed into American citizens, be doing their part through taxation to pay the interest on the whole public debt thus consolidated? On the other hand, we could not be expected to assume the municipal debts contracted by Canadian cities. But indirectly we should help to pay them, through the tremendous increase of Canadian population and prosperity which would be sure to follow annexation. The disposition of the Provincial debts might present some difficulty, and indeed this is the only point which would require mature consideration and concessions on both sides. It is probable, however, that if the Canadian Provinces would, in their collective capacity, do what Texas did, make over to us a certain portion of the outlying public lands, we might deem it expedient, and even profitable, to relieve them of their Provincial debts, and thus enable them to start fair in their new political career.
