Mrs. Langtry has not been a success in New Orleans. Each successive performance saw a diminished audience. Lawrence Barrett and Mille Rhea, who were playing in the city at the same time, each did better than the Lily. Even the latter's alleged beauty did not catch on. The year begins badly for Madame Damala Berohardt. She entrusted to one of her relatives the sum of 420,000 francs, to be invested in her business, and now her kinsman has become bankrupt. She writes that she will not abandon her theatres, the Ambigu and Modern, but will struggle against evil fortune.

Mr. Walter Robinson and Miss Nellie Hesse of the "Corinne Merrymakers," were married during the performance at New Haven in full view of the audience. The Criterion underground theatre, of which Spiers and Pond are owners, is thus alluded to by a London correspondent: 'The place is a terror to all playgoers, as it is ill constructed, and the ottlets are notoriously unsafe. Chas. Wyndham is the advertised lessee, and recently his license was suspended, and the authorities ordered alterations which in reality comprised the demolition of the theatre. Now I learn that another three months' grace has been granted; but it is generally believed that the Criterion theatre is doomed, and that it ought to have been shut up years ago. It has never been a popular house, and the entertainments were more flashy than re-fined."
