The past season has been more than a fairly productive one all over the globe, and therefore calls for more than usual rejoicing and then keristher and it. The past season has been more than a fairly productive one all over the globe, and therefore calls for more than usual rejoic ling and thanksgiving, and it is a gratifying sign of the age that in most Christian lands the ruler, whether king or president, has adopted the custom of setting apart a day soon after the close of the annual harvest as a day of general thanksgiving. In some states, as in the neighboring republic, a fixed day in each year, has either by ous tom or law, been appointed for this special expression of the people's gratitude. In the United States the last Thursday in the current month is the day thus firmly established more by custom than law. No such day has been fixed by law in Great Britain or its colonies, but the Queen or her ropresentative in the colonies appoints a day by proclamation for the purpose.
