Poetry. "Fall Asleep." BY REV. S. P. SMITH. Yes, "fall asleep,"—but sleep implies two wakings.

Select Literature. "Did you ever give a man the wrong medicine, Dr. Macpherson?" I asked him, as we sat chatting in my surgery.

It was when I was quite a young man," he began, "and soon after I started a practice in my own right. I had taken a pretty large house there, as a doctor is bound to do if he wants to get on, and kept a couple of servants.

"I was not successful enough then to disregard the chance of gaining a risk, and so, as long as you talk about something by and keep me from the loneliness that I dread. Do take a cigar and help yourself to the whiskey."

"I was beginning to think that the young man certainly did not show any anxiety. "I was beginning to think that the young man certainly did not show any anxiety.

"I am sorry that you have had to come so far," he said politely. "I thought that he would be able to find a medical man much nearer. Surely there are some?"

"The room was comfortably, almost handsomely, furnished as a sitting-room, and contained a cheerful looking fire, before which two arm-chairs were drawn up, with a small table between them, containing two glasses, a bottle of whiskey, and a siphon of soda water, besides a box of cigars.

"Parson's me," I said, in considerable astonishment, "but had I not better see the patient before I do anything else?"

"I am a victim to insomnia," he went on, after I had taken the other armchair; "I suffer terribly. You cannot tell what it is to stay awake all night long while the rest of the world is asleep. Not a soul to speak to, the one living person in a city of dead."

"I do not remember doing so. But I once gave a man an overdose of a drug for sleep-giving which nearly killed him. It was his own fault, though, as you will see when I tell you the story."

"I assure you, doctor, that I looked upon it quite as a business matter. I do not look upon a physician as a philanthropist, but as a business man, whose chief inducement, after all, is to make money. My patient took advantage of the pause to proceed in his gentle, half-apologetic manner.

"I was not successful enough then to disregard the chance of gaining a risk, and so, as long as you talk about something by and keep me from the loneliness that I dread. Do take a cigar and help yourself to the whiskey."

Howard, in the Boston Globe, makes the following protest against the torture inflicted upon the noble animal, the horse, during the heated term to a great city. We regret to say that not only in the great cities is this inhumanly evident, but even the least observing of us, in the smallest communities, must have almost daily evidence of the unmerciful treatment of horses by their owners and drivers.

"It is an interesting, but not a pleasant sight, that of 2,000,000 of people overpowered by the broiling heat of a mercurial sun. New York, and, indeed, extends all along the belt, have literally suffered, not only endured, but suffered with the heat of the past 10 days. I cannot bring myself to consider for a moment the agonies, the agony and the torture borne by brute animals, and, more especially, the noblest servant of them all, the horse.

"I have not the least use giving me drugs, doctor, and I have saturated my system with them, and they have no effect upon me."

Rev. J. C. Morse, D.D., FOR FIFTY YEARS A PREACHER OF THE GOSPEL. Cured of Rheumatism and Neuralgia by Hawker's Nerve and Stomach Tonic.

One of the most interesting figures of the recent Baptist convention in the city of Nova Scotia, was Dr. J. C. Morse, of Sandy Cove, N. S. He has been a faithful and successful preacher at that place for half a century, and is a man of wonderful bodily and mental vigor.

Dear Sir:—For ten years I have suffered from Rheumatism and Neuralgia in the right side of the spine. All the remedies that were prescribed by three or four doctors gave me no relief whatever, and I gave up all hopes of ever regaining my health. Your remedies were recommended to me by Capt. Geo. M. Dakin. After taking six bottles of your nerve and stomach tonic, I feel like a new man.

There is a man," said a neighbor, speaking of a village carpenter, "who has done more good, I really believe, in this community, than any other person who ever lived in it. He cannot talk very well in prayer-meeting, and he doesn't very often try. It isn't worth two thousand dollars, and it's very little he can put down on subscription papers for any good object. But a new family never moves into the village that does not find them out to give them a hearty welcome, and offer every little service he can render. He is usually on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew at church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor, and look after his affairs for him. He has a large number of poor people who have kept house-plants in winter just for the sake of being able to send little bouquets to invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word for every child he meets; and you'll always see them climbing into his one-horse wagon when he has no other load. He really seems to have a genius for helping folks in all sorts of common ways, and it does me good every day just to meet him in the street."

Jas. Ritchie, Q.C., BARRISTER, AND SOLICITOR! MONEY TO LOAN ON REAL ESTATE SECURITY. Fire Insurance in Reliable Companies.

Solicitor at Annapolis to Union Bank of Halifax, and Bank of Nova Scotia, Annapolis, N. S. Bishop Fallows' Saloon.

Luncheon and beer without a headache or any of the evils ascribed to intoxicants was the venture of Rev. Samuel Fallows, D. D., of the Baptist Church, in this year, at the mouth of February of either year, which were some who laughed at him, and some who wished him success, but doubted whether it would come in the way he proposed.

"The saloon," said Bishop Fallows to The Chronicle, "is the practical plan of fighting intemperance. It is a steady increase of being an antagonist to the temperance reform movement, as it is generally understood. I am with my reform movement. But I continued in the beginning of this movement that you couldn't have the coffee houses of the saloon influence which has its restaurants and cafe features unless you give some of the comforts which they give in saloons. We wish all these comforts without any of the evils that attend them, and we wish the original outlay, which was between $1,000 and $2,000. In another six months it will pay for itself to 20 per cent on the investment, and that is about what the coffee houses of London pay. So much for the business end of it."

Bishop Fallows spoke of the good which has been done. He said that many of his patrons were men who liked coffee and wine and whiskey, but that they tell him they do not care to take such drinks every time they go to an eating place, so they go to the home saloon. Some men have no knowledge of the value of such things, they often drink in saloons because they are often in contact with congenial companions, and one round led to another until they felt the bad effects.

Laboring men in the vicinity called to him in the same vein. It was frequently the case that these laboring men wanted some sort of drink with their noon hour meal, and they found that bishop's beer, which is made of pure water and hops without any intoxicants, and which is sold at a low price, is the best of the bishop is a tonic, so he claims, and he says that those who drink it say the same thing.

The movement has a charitable feature in this way. A number of business men have bought a book of the bishop's coupons. Each coupon calls for a glass of beer and some bread and butter and a slice of meat. Ten cents represents the cost of such a meal. The business men carry away the coupons, and when they meet a beggar, as they are apt to do every time they walk a block, they meet the mendicant's appeal with a coupon, and he cannot see how they else than at the Home Saloon. He goes there, and he is fitted, and the influence of the atmosphere of the place has, the bishop claims, a beneficial effect. One wholesale house bought 100 books of coupons and distributed them periodically, through the clerk's cash account among the clerks of their company and among the clerks of their cousins and are regular patrons.

"We not only give to eat and drink at a minimum sum," said the bishop, over his glass of beer, "but we cater to the comfort of the man who comes in. You see, you get into a saloon cafe you sometimes may play a game of cards or indulge in some sort of amusement. Of course one cannot play cards in this place. But every day, at the noon hour, a man comes in and takes in one of the coupons and he is satisfied. He has a good meal, and he is satisfied. He has a good meal, and he is satisfied. He has a good meal, and he is satisfied."

—Reports from the interior of Kent county, N. B., show that the August blizzard was more disastrous than that of 1888. A committee sent to investigate found fifty farms on which the crops were ruined, and some were being destroyed. Poultry was killed in the fields, grass broken and the roofs of buildings damaged. On many other farms 25 to 50 per cent of the crop is destroyed. Fully fifty farms are virtually without the necessities of life, having neither food for man or beast, with a long winter starting them in the face.
