if you are the Government, then these things take time.

A lot of changes have taken place in the last 10 years but, again, it takes time for people who are benefiting from those changes to realize them.

So you have a double time lag there, that you are facing, and I can only say that we have to keep pressing ahead in the hope that, on the one hand, the majority will support those changes — as it has up to now — and that the minority will realize that things are taking place.

MR. ANDERSON: Along these lines -MINISTER LALONDE: Surely.

MR. ANDERSON: You speak of changes in the Constitutional structure.

What kind of changes do you have in mind?
What are the possibilities?

MINISTER LALONDE: Well, Canada at the present time is one of the most decentralized Federal Systems in the world. There is a lot of talk in Canada about the necessity of decentralizing; and further decentralization.

I think there is serious illusion as to how much more decentralization we can have in Canada. Like I said, if you compare the other Federal Systems in the world, ours is almost the most decentralized; I would say.

However, there is room for change--in several respects.
