Through the World Food Programme, Canada has helped 2,500 farmers and over 6,000 rural families increase their food security and resilience to climate change. This has been accomplished through improved water irrigation and collection systems, agroforestry and soil conservation techniques.

Between September 2015 and March 2017, the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala investigated 52 criminal cases. It identified and worked to dismantle 26 criminal structures, filing 165 formal accusations against members of criminal networks. Through this initiative, 85% of public prosecutors in the Guatemala Public Ministry's investigation unit against impunity have strengthened their capacities in:

- criminal analysis;
- preparation of investigation plans;
- analysis and interpretation of data;
- use of special investigation methods such as wiretapping and video evidence;
- processing and presentation of evidence;
- preparation of process; and
- litigation strategies and judicial arguments.
